New York Judge Grants Stay Until Friday on Extradition.

Defense Planning To Fight Decision

New York, Oct. 16 (AP).—Supreme Court Justice Ernest L. Hammer tonight denied the application of Bruno Richard Hauptmann for a writ of habeas corpus against his extradition to New Jersey to face a charge of murdering the baby son of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh.

The justice granted a stay of execution on the extradition until 4 p. m. October 19. James M. Fawcett, chief defense counsel, had requested a delay until October 22, but the court ruled this would be unreasonable.

David T. Wilentz, attorney general for New Jersey, earlier had said the prisoner would not be removed to Flemington, N. J., until the defense counsel had an opportunity to appeal an adverse decision by the Bronx court.

Jersey Prepairs for Trial.

Wilentz announced that he was preparing for trial of Hauptmann on the murder charge at Flemington, N. J., and probably would be ready to begin it within two weeks.

The Jersey attorney general added, however, that the prosecution would not attempt to rush the defense.

"It may be three or four weeks after Hauptmann is brought to New Jersey," he said, "before the trial will start."

Fawcett indicated he would proceed immediately with an appeal which normally would be heard by the appellate division of the supreme court. The next step would be for him to go before the court of appeals, the State's highest tribunal.

The habeas corpus writ, had it been granted, would have nullified the extradition order signed by Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York on the request of New JJersey's chief executive.

Sought to Set Up Alibi.

Hearing on the prisoner's petition occupied two full court days and one night session. The defense attacked the proposed extradition by attempting to establish an alibi for Hauptmann for the night of March 1, 1932, when the Lindbergh baby was stolen from his nursery.

Hauptmann's wife, Anna, was the principal witness for the accused, testifying her husband called for her that night at a Bronx bakery where she worked and acompanied her home.

New Jersey prosecutors, headed by Attorney General Wilentz, opposed the application of the writ by introducing handwriting experts who asserted the ransom notes were in Hauptmann's handwriting and mann had been seen near the Lindbergh home a short time before the abduction.

In a dramatic moment earlier in the day, Millard White, a Jersey lumberman, touched Hauptmann on the shoulder and declared him to be the "stranger" he saw on two occasions near the Hopewell Lindbergh home.

Notes Linked to Prisoner.

Millard Whited, a Jersey farmer and lumberman, tapped Bruno Hauptmann on the shoulder in the Bronx Supreme Court and identified him as the "stranger" he saw on two occasions near the Hopewell home of Lindbergh in the two weeks before the flier's first-born son was abducted and slain.

With this identification, Attorney General Wilentz rested his State's demand for the extradition of the alien ex-convict.

Defense Counsel Fawcett countered the Whited identification with the testimony of three neighbors, one of them a cousin of the farmer, who avowed his reputation for varacity is bad.

The ransom notes—which the State of New Jersey contends prove

By Douglas Warrenfels.

Prosecution or exoneration of blacklisted air-mail operators was demanded of the Administration yesterday by Col. Charles A. Lindbergh.

The noted pilot, appearing before the President's Aviation Commission, expounded his views on flying for an hour, took time to spin a yarn or two about his boyhood and demonstrated he still has what it takes to make hte feminine heart flutter.

Several score stenographers, unable to gain admittance to the tiny Commerce Department library hearing room, waited outside for a

Suicide Strike Comes to End; Miners Bitter

1,200 Exhausted Workers Claim Insanity Drove Them Into Truce.

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

Pecs, Hungary, Oct. 16.—Haggard, exhausted Hungarian miners, 1,200 of them, still were bitter tonight over conditions that drove them to their five-day effort at mass suicide in underground darkness.

Spokesmen for the miners said they accepted compromise terms offered by the company "because we were demented, because we didn't know what we were doing."

Continuous official and private entreaty early today led the coal miners to abandon their suicide strike for higher wages, but so horrible had been their experience that 110 of the "resurrected" were rushed to hospitals.

Gulp Food Ravenously.

They came blinking into the bright sunlight, their clothes in tatters, many of them barefooted, their faces gaunt and bearded, to tear ravenously at food and gulp water offered by frantic relatives waiting above.

Some, too weak to walk, were brought out on stretchers. Others could not be moved and were left lying on the coal that had been their bed for more than five days.

That the 1,200 did not carry out their stubborn decision to die by suffocation or drowning was due largely to efforts of Gen. Janos Estergalyos, Democratic Socialist member of the Hungarian Parliament, and himself once a miner, who was the only man they trusted, the only outsider they let enter the mine.

Relatives Rush Guards.

Despairing wives and children waiting at the pit's mouth were hysterical with mingled anguish and joy as the wretched men came out. They fought with soldiers, posted with machine guns to halt disorders, to reach husbands and fathers.

The population of this village, its most heart-rending experience at an

Kelley Listed Bidders, Says Engineer's Aid

Impeachment Trial of Arlington Official Under Way.

Testimony to show that Lyman M. Kelley, chairman of the Arlington County Board, had telephoned for the names of contractors bidding on Arlington County's sewerage system was introduced yesterday at the opening of Kelley's impeachment trial. The case is being tried before Judge Frederick W. Coleman, of Fredericksburg, and a jury in Arlington.

The testimony that Kelley, whose private business is that of surety bonding company agent and also insurance agent, had a list of contractors on the several million dollars sewerage job was given by Donald Mills, an employe of the Chester Engineering Co., and one of the men who aided A. B. McDaniel, engineer, draw up plans and specifications of the sewerage system. The Chester organization has the contract for construction of the system.

Two other witnesses also appeared yesterday, opening day of the trial. They took the stand after the jury had been chosen, a process involving several hours because the original panel quickly was exhausted and considerable time was consumed in scouring the county for another list of veniremen.

The witnesses were Mrs. Rachel White, Deputy Clerk of the Circuit Court for Arlington, who testified on Kelley's election and assumption of office. Mrs. Elizabeth H. Agnew, secretary to Roy S. Braden, county

Princess Cantacuzene to File For Divorce Soon, Says Prince

Julia Dent Grant, Princess Cantacuzene, who left here Monday after regaining her United States citizenship last week, is bound for Sarasota, Fla., where her husband, Prince Cantacuzene, once aide de camp to Grand Duke Nicholas of Russia, was quoted yesterday by the Associated Press as saying he expected her to file suit for divorce.

Divorce talk had been in the air for some time, the prince is reported to have said, and he added that he would not contest the suit.

The couple were married in 1899, and have three children, Prince Michael Cantacuzene, now of Chicago; Bertha, formerly Mrs. Bruce Smith, of Louisville, Ky.; and Ida, Mrs. John Hanbury-Williams, of London. Princess Cantacuzene, granddaughter of President Grant, is 58 years old, while the prince is 62.

Shanghai, Oct. 16 (AP).—A United States marshal today arrested seven members of the crew of the S. S. President Jefferson when the vessel docked, following a fight aboard ship between union and nonunion crew men.

The rioting broke out shortly after the Dollar liner had left Yokohama and two of the fighters were badly beaten.

Milk Buyers Act to Form Cooperative

Plans for Consumer and Farmer Tieup to Be Ready Soon.

By Edward T. Folliard.

A farmer-consumer cooperative, which would sell milk in Washington at a lower price may be formed in the near future, it was announced yesterday at a meeting of the Consumers' Council of Washington.

If the cooperative which they have in mind is set up, they hope milk ultimately will sell here for not more than 9 cents a quart.

Mrs. John Boyle, jr., and Matthew F. Boyd, president and vice president of the Consumers' Council, announced several dairy farmers in nearby Maryland and Virginia are willing to join the proposed cooperative.

These farmers, Mrs. Boyle and Mr. Boyd said, are dissatisfied with the present arrangement whereby they sell what milk they can to the seven distributors in this city.

More for Farmer.

With a cooperative distributing milk here, it was said, the consumer not only would pay less, but the farmer would get more.

Admitting that the idea of a cooperative was in the embryo stage, the proponent announced they would have a definite plan ready in about two weeks.

Mrs. Boyle said an ideal basis for a cooperative would be a pasteurizing plant operated by the District of Columbia. The farmers, under that arrangement, would ship their milk to the city's pasteurizing plant and there independent distributors would pick up as much as they had arranged to sell, be it a case or a truck load.

Mrs. Boyle suggested the municipal pasteurizing plant be built with funds of the Emergency Relief Administration.

Even if that were not feasible, she said, the cooperative still could be operated on an effective scale. Several of the farmers who are eager to join the venture, she said, have their own pasteurizing plants and therefore would be able to send milk here ready for delivery.

Own Plant Possible.

Once the cooperative got under way, and assuming that it was successful, Mrs. Boyle said, it could erect its own plant to take care of milk not pasteurized at the point of production.

It was announced at yesterday's meeting that the Federal Trade Commission, in cooperation with the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, will examine the books of the two big milk distributors in Washington.

These distributors, the Chestnut Farms-Chevy Chase Dairy, operated by the National Dairy Products Corporation, and the Thompson Dairy, told the consumers council they were perfectly willing to have their books examined.

At the same time, the two dairies, according to Mrs. Boyle, said they

Negligence Charged to Warms, Aids

Four Are Named With Liner's Master in Inquiry Report.

Board Declares Delays Added to Death Toll in Disaster.

New York, Oct. 16 (AP).—Negligence that caused an increased death toll in the Morro Castle holocaust was charged today against Acting Capt. William F. Warms and four ranking officers of the fire-swept vessel by a Federal inquiry board.

Chief Engineer Eben S. Abbott, Second Officer Clarence Hackney, Third Officer Harold Hansen and First Assistant Engineer Antonio R. Buijia were ordered with Warms to appear October 29 to defend their licenses against revocation or suspension.

Acting Chief Officer Ivan Freeman alone among the deck officers was not charged with negligence in the preliminary report of the inquiry, signed by Capt. Karl C. Neilsen and James C. Smith, Dickerson N. Hoover, of the Bureau of Navigation, was a member of the Investigating Board.

Delays Cited.

Failure to halt the blazing vessel sooner, delay in wirelessing distress signals and inefficient handling of lifeboats were cited by the inspectors as responsible for at least some of the 132 deaths in the disaster.

"Had the vessel been stopped immediately after the fire was discovered in the superstructure—which would have tended to prevent the rapid spread of the fire—and the call for assistance not delayed," the inspectors ruled, "it is apparent that rescue vessels would have been in the vicinity of the stricken liner much earlier, and no doubt would have been instrumental in saving a greater number of lives."

1. Delaying distress signals, "thus unduly jeopardizing the lives of passengers and crew."

Other Charges.

2. Failure to stop the vessel "after you were aware that the superstructure was on fire and the vessel was steaming into a fresh breeze."

3. Failure to have fire hose connected and ready for immediate use.

4. Failure to order fire screen doors closed.

5. "That you failed to have your deck crew divided into equal watches, as required by the seaman's act, and thereby reducing the number of men on watch at the itme the fire was reported."

Post Cooking School Upsets Roast Theories

50 Million Housewives Have Been Wrong in Basting Meat, Miss Chambers Reveals to Overflow Audience at Auditorium Exhibition.

Fifty million American housewives have been wrong.

A portion of the 50,000,000 learned yesterday in The Post cooking school held in Washington Auditorium that roasting meat should not be basted; that the roast should not be seared before it goes into the oven, and that no water should be added.

It was Miss Ruth Chambers, associated with the National Live Stock and Meat Board, who blasted the time-honored methods in a brilliant demonstration of cooking before an enthusiastic audience of Washington women, intent on learning the latest in cookery.

The Post School, one of the largest ever held in the District, will meet again today and tomorrow at 2 p. m., with the concluding session scheduled for Friday at 8 p. m. to permit business men and women to attend.

Women who gathered at the Auditorium as early as 10 a. m. yesterday were not disappointed in the pageant of cookery displayed during the afternoon session. Devotees of cooking-as-it-should-be gave hearty applause to demonstrations of new and unusual cooking methods, which in the skilled hands of the scientifically trained demonstrators, resulted in attractive and delectable dishes.

Mrs. J. J. Flannagan, of 1203 Otis street northeast, won the electric cook-all, awarded her during the distribution of gifts at the close of the session, and Mrs. Elizabeth Rooney, of 2020 Monroe street northeast, received an electric mixer, two of the more important of 50 prizes awarded.

Additional awards will be made at each succeeding session and persons attending any session will be eligible for the grand prizes to be awarded Friday evening, provided they are present at that time. These grand awards, to be given in addition to the daily ones, are a gas

MRS. ALICE SPEED STOLL.

Haste on the part of the kidnapers to spend ransom money paid for the return of Mrs. Alice Speed Stoll led to her safe recovery, J. Edgar Hoover, head of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, announced last night.

The ransom money, $50,000, was paid at Nashville, Tenn., Monday night. Less than 24 hours later the bills began to appear in circulation at filling stations and elsewhere on the National highway between Indianapolis and Terre Haute, Ind.

Trailing the notes, Department of Justice agents found that the trail led southward toward Louisville, the home of the kidnaped woman.

Senate Traces U. S. Holdings Of Zaharoff

Electric Boat Queries Are Made; Arms Delvers May Ask Funds.

By Robert C. Albright.

Investigators for the Senate Munitions Committee once more have taken up the devious trail of Sir Basil Zaharoff, backstage master of international transactions running the gamut of the world's war machines.

Chairman Gerald P. Nye is interested in developing more tangible evidence of the international arms salesman's interest in certain American munitions firms, it was learned authoritatively.

Brokers known to have holdings in Electric Boat Co., largest domestic manufacturers of submarines, are being queried in correspondence sent out by the committee's investigating staff. Specifically, Senator Nye wants to find out how much stock Sir Basil holds in the company, through possible American agents.

Wider Inquiry Prospect.

The latest twist to the committee's inquiry developed as reports gained that interested members intend to seek a substantial additional appropriation at the approaching session of Congress, to extend the scope of the investigation.

The $50,000 appropriation under which the recent hearings were launched is nearly exhausted, and Chief Investigator Stephen Raush-

Ihlder Named To Direct D. C. Alley Project

James Ring Is Appointed Housing Expert's Aid in Program.

John Ihlder, local housing expert, yesterday was assigned the task of eliminating Washington's 2,000-odd alley dwellings within the next ten years under authority of the Capper-Norton act.

The Alley Authority appointed Ihlder to the post of executive officer after consulting a half dozen applicants for the job. At the same time it named James Ring, another applicant, as administrative assistant to Ihlder.

The actual task of converting the 200 inhabited alleys in the National Capital into parks, playgrounds, streets, or commercial property will be largely in the hands of Ihlder and Ring, while the Alley Authority will act as a supervising director of the work.

Both Ihlder and Ring have conducted previous surveys of Washington's slums. Both men were associtaed on Capitol Hill several years ago in promoting the legislation which was enacted at the last session of Congress.

Helped Pass Bill.

Ihlder, as consultant for the National Capital Park and Planning Commission has gathered voluminous data and designed many plans with reference to Washington's alleys. More recently he was secretary of the Washington Housing

Glands Removed from One Man, 'Trained,' Replanted in Another

By Howard W. Blakeslee
(Associated Press Science Editor).

Boston, Oct. 16 (AP).—Removing glands from a human being, keeping them alive and "training" them in a glass dish for four weeks, then replanting them successfully in another human being was described to the American College of Surgeons tonight.

The new method of gland transplantation promises a solution of the grafting problem which began with the famous "rejuvenation" glands. The borrowed glands shriveled and disappeared rather quickly.

The "training" under the new technique seems to help immensely. While kept alive in a glass dish the glands are given time to get accustomed, by small doses, to the kind of chemical physique possessed by the person who will receive them.

The result is that borrowed glands have lived thus far for a year and a half, and are still going strong.

The glands successfully transplanted are the parathyroids, and with somewhat less effectiveness the thyroids. Both glands lie near the base of the neck.

The method was described by Harvey B. Stone, M. D., of Baltimore, who perfected it. The parathyroid glands regulate the use of calcium in the blood. Dr. Stone has transplanted parathyroids to persons suffering a calcium deficiency causing tetany, an obstinate, spasmodic nervous affliction.

The usual method of treating gland difficulties of both kinds is to give the patient gland extract as medicine. The transplanted glands cause the body itself to furnish the same kind of "medicine."

Three Seized In Abduction Of Socialite At Louisville

U. S. Agents Intercept Auto on Road and Rescue Hostage.

Officers Traced Her Phone Call

Woman Who Picked Up Ransom Package Is Trailed.

Louisville, Ky., Oct. 16 (A.P.).—Mrs. Alice Speed Stoll was reported safe and on her way home tonight.

The Courier-Journal says that less than an hour after Mrs. Stoll was released, three persons were placed under arrest by investigators of the kidnaping.

The party was accompanied by a Federal agent and was expected to reach Louisville within a short time. The information received here was that Mrs. Stoll was accompanied by the Rev. E. Arnold Clegg, pastor of the Capital Methodist Episcopal Church, Indianapolis, and his wife, and Mrs. Thomas H. Robinson, of Nashville, Tenn.

"Get Off the Wire."

Professions of ignorance as to the return of Mrs. Stoll came from members of the family who were canvassed by telephone as soon as the report was received.

"This has been a big day, please get off the wire," was the remark of Berry V. Stoll, husband of the victim.

Other members of the family said they had heard nothing of the report.

The Courier-Journal said the break in the case came when Mrs. Robinson, who had been under surveillance at Nashville, picked up the ransom package in Nashville.

Federal agents trailed Mrs. Robinson from Nashville to Terre Haute, Ind. At Terre Haute, an attempt was made to get Mrs. Robinson to get into a taxicab driven by a Federal agent. This move failed when she decided to take another cab.

From Terre Haute, Mrs. Robinson was trailed to Indianapolis and to the home of the Cleggs.

Hostage Calls Home.

During the afternon, Mrs. Stoll was allowed to call her home near here. The telephone call was traced to the Clegg home in Indianapolis.

Federal agents, watching the Indianapolis hideout, saw a Studebaker automobile containing Mrs. Stoll, leave the Clegg residence early Tuesday night.

An automobile containing Federal agents followed the car as it took the road to Louisville. Another squad of agents was dispatched from Louisville to intercept it.

Rich N.Y. Man's Son Kidnaped

Louis S. Esposito Is Held for 20,000 Ransom, Police Are Told.

New York, Oct. 16 (U.P.).—Louis S. Esposito, 23, son of a wealthy Bronx merchant, is being held by kidnapers for $20,000 ransom, it was learned tonight.

Esposito disappeared shortly after 6 p. m. yesterday after driving his grandfather home. Two hours later a telephone call was received at the home of his parents. The caller said Louis had been kidnaped, was being held for $20,000 ransom and would be killed unless the money was paid.

The caller told relatives to go to an appointed restaurant. There, the family was told, a girl with a beauty mark on her cheek would be waiting. She would provide them with further directions. The caller warned against notifying police.

Two members of the family hurried to the restaurant and waited two or three hours, but the girl failed to appear.

They returned to the Esposito home and waited through the night. Today the family consulted a lawyer, who advised them to go to police.

Women's Posts For Episcopal Council Voted

Atlantic City, N. J., Oct. 16 (AP).—Upsetting an ancient church tradition, the house of deputies at the fifty-first triennial general Episcopal convention today voted women a place in the chief administrative body of the church.

Heated debate preceded the action, but final word was a plea for recognition of the "ability, generosity and effectiveness," of women in church work by Roswell Page, of Beaver Dam, Va., brother of the late Amabassador Walter Hines Page and a prominent lay delegate to the convention.

If the house of Bishops concurs in the action, four members of the Episcopal Women's Auxiliary will be elected to augment the National council of 24 which administers the church's affairs in the interim between triennial sessions.

Opposition Voiced.

Opposition to the plan was expressed by the Rev. Frederick C. Fleming, rector of Trinity Church, New York, who declared:

"We have enough trouble in the National council at this time without women."

The Rev. Stanley C. Hughes, of Newport News, Va., said the measure was not approved by a majority of the women's auxiliary and that the church women themselves did not want representation on the council.

W. G. Peterkin, of Parkersburg, W. Va., pointed out that the plan was conceived by the council itself. The Rev. Karl Block, of St. Louis, also supported the measure.

A flare-up on the convention floor followed introduction in the house of deputies of a resolution of greeting to Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, former NRA chief and an elected delegate, though absent through illness, from the Quincy, Mass. Diocese.

Samuel F. Houston, Philadelphia, financial leader, moved for tabling of the resolution after its introduction by Frank E. Brandt, Rockford, Ill., newspaperman.

Resolution Defeated.

A vote on Houston's motion was directed by the Rev. Ze Barney T. Phillips, of Washington, chairman, and a roar of "noes" drowned out a few scattered cries of "aye" as the vote was taken. The convention then voted on the Brandt resolution and the chairman declared its passage unanimous.

"Just read in the papers about Gen. Johnson and you will know the reason," Houston said later when asked why he opposed the resolution.

"Everybody knows that Gen. Johnson has to have everything he says censored by his secretary."

manager, gave testimony that bonds in connection with the project were recorded in her office and that the bonds were written by the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., and were counter-signed by A. L. Kelley, father of the defendant.

This testimony was attacked by Edmund D. Campbell, Kelley's counsel, on the ground that A. L. Kelley's signature did not link the defendant with the charges found by a grand jury that Kelley, as chairman of the board, was guilty of alleged malfeasance, misfeasance and gross neglect of duty. Judge Coleman overruled the defense objection.

The defense obtained an admission from Mrs. Agnew that none of the bonds in question was accepted by the county board.

Quashing Is Denied.

Mr. Campbell moved at the opening of court to quash the charges, on the ground that Judge Coleman was outside his jurisdiction in trying the case and also on the ground that the charges were found after the grand jury had been advised in their preparation by Lawrence W. Douglas, Commonwealth's Attorney for Arlington County. Both motions were overruled.

The seven men on the jury are: James B. Lockwood, of Clarendon; Martin I. Cooke, East Falls Church; T. C. Furr, Clarendon; E. W. Hoskins, Arlington; R. O. Via, Virginia Highlands; Wade Thomas, Virginia Highlands, and W. C. Crossman, East Falls Church.

Arlington County is represented by Mr. Douglas and by Collins Denny, jr., former Assistant Attorney General of Virginia, while Mr. Kelley is being defended by Mr. Campbell and Leon Bazile, another former Assistant Attorney General for the Old Dominion.

Between You and Me

Democrats Counting on Gains in House as Well as Senate Next Month.

By Raymond Clapper

DEMOCRATS have the lid down on election predictions, but it is not because they lack confidence. They never have been so cocksure. Privately, they count on gains not only in the Senate, as everyone expects, but also in the House.

That, if it materializes, will be something new in politics since the Civil War. Not in all of that time has an Administration, no matter how popular, been able to make a honeymoon last two years. Invariably, dead cats have begun to fly at the midterm election.

Republicans are prepared to be thrown for a loss in the Senate. They have no such spirit of resignation with regard to the House. Thirty new Republican seats is their minimum expectation. Democrats are betting the other way. They count at least ten big round eggs that are going to hatch new Democrats election day.

• • • •

That sounds a little crazy. But look at what's happening out in the Iowa cornfields where up to now they have had three R's of their own brand—Raising (corn, not Cain), Religion and Republicanism. For the last one they have substituted Roosevelt. The Des Moines Register and Tribune, Republican Bible of the corn belt, has just taken a poll. About 50,000 votes have been counted. It shows some things that surprised the publisher of that enterprising newspaper, Gardner Cowles, Mr. Hoover's close friend and a former director of the RFC.

One question was: "Would you vote for Mr. Roosevelt if he were a candidate for reelection this year?"

Answers: Yes, 32,523; no, 16,881.

The next question was: "Did you vote for Mr. Roosevelt in 1932?"

Answers: Yes, 29,634; no, 19,680.

• • • •

Congressional polls are even more to the point at the moment. Despite the Roosevelt landslide in 1932, Republicans held three of the nine Iowa seats in the House. But in the Des Moines Register and Tribune poll, Democratic candidates are leading in every district. In the Des Moines area, the strongest Republican section in the State, the veteran Republican Representative, Cassius C. Dowell, who survived the 1932 hurricane, is trailing 1,300 votes behind his Democratic opponent in a total vote of about 9,000.

Weakest Democratic candidates are Representatives Biermann and Wearin, who voted against the Administration on AAA. That may not mean much because all three Republican members who are trailing in the poll voted for it.

• • • •

There's only one place where the Democratic GHQ is indifferent. That is in Wisconsin's senatorial race. It will be all right with the Democrats if Senator La Follette wins. In fact, they expect him to and are doing nothing about it. That is because the Democratic candidate, Callahan, was a leader in the stop-Roosevelt movement at Chicago in 1932. If he comes through it will be purely by his own efforts.

A very prominent Administration Democrat, Senator Robert F. Wagner, is about to go into Wisconsin to campaign—not for the Democratic candidate but for his old friend and side-partner in many a battle on the Senate floor—young Bob La Follette. The going does not seem as propitious for Brother Phil, the Progressive candidate for Governor. The Democrat, Gov. Schmedeman, is listed to win.

It didn't bother Secretary Ickes very much when Arizona ranchers burned him in effigy a few days ago for turning down their irrigation project. He is about to do some burning in effigy himself in his book, "The New Democracy." Ickes hits at the "Little Green House on K Street" of the the Harding Administration, lambasts the "greatest Secretary of the Treasury since Hamilton," compares rugged indivualists with kidnapers, bootleggers and cheaters, is sarcastic at the Liberty League, jibes constitutional lawyers and Henry P. Fletcher, says the North was no better than the slave South but merely found it was cheaper and more advantageous to import labor and treat it brutally. That's part of what was left after Ickes toned down his manuscript.

Lindbergh Urges "Blacklist" Trial

glimpse of Col. Lindbergh, but the crowd-shy celebrity departed by a side door, arm in arm with Elliott Roosevelt, son of the President.

Lindbergh's Bon Mot.

"When I was a boy in the West," he somewhat apologetically related, "I was riding with a farmer in a buggy one time. There weren't many automobiles around there in those days.

"When a car passed, my companion remarked: 'If they ever build those things so they can drive them with reins there will be quite a few of them.'"

After the laughter subsided, Lindbergh drew a parallel between the early history of the automobile and the increasing popularity of airplanes due to development of new safety devices.

He characterized as a "disturbing factor" in aviation a ruling by Postmaster General Farley that no company whose officials participated in a "spoils conference" for allocation of air-mail contracts could bid for new awards so long as the executives were retained.

"Most of us in the industry," he said, "don't know the status of the men on the blacklist. That weakens the morale of the industry. I feel it is of great importance to decide the status of these men.

"Charges should be brought and carried through the proper courts. If that is not done they should be cleared."

Dressed in a gray suit, black and white striped tie and a white shirt, Lindbergh skipped from problem to problem with apparent ease. Only his profile was visible to the audience as he kept his face turned to the commission.

Visions Ocean Service.

He said the day is "not far distant" when giant planes will roar across the Atlantic and Pacific on regular schedules.

"Planes now being built," he added, "are suitable for this service. There should, however, be a long trial period during which passengers should not be carried."

He unfolded a brilliant word picture of greatly expanded use of big air liners capable of 24-hour nonstop flights. He predicted the cabins of such ships would be supercharged to sustain life at high altitudes.

"A man learns to fly more easily," he remarked, "if he knows how to ride a bicycle or motorcycle or knows how to drive a car. Pilots of transport planes should be very nearly graduate engineers."

His recommendation to the commission included:

Moderate Government regulation of transport lines.

Improved research facilities for weather forecasting, including funds to study means of preventing ice forming on wings.

Holds U. S. Leads in Flying.

Lindbergh declared important developments in radio for transport ships were in prospect. He said beacons probably would be needed permanently, primarily for the convenience of private pilots.

The colonel rated American aviation as "on the whole materially ahead of any foreign country."

Asked whether an efficient commercial aviation system would be an asset in time of war, he responded:

"The importance of commercial aviation from the military standpoint is in the training of personnel and in keeping manufacturing plants available rather than having commercial planes for use in time of war. Commercial transport ships, of course, could be used as military transports."

He said he did not believe planes with rotating wings would replace those now in use. Accidents ordinarily happen too suddenly, he observed, for passengers to successfully use parachutes.

Questioned about the danger of plane collisions in midair, Lindbergh said he hoped someone would invent a device to inform a pilot of the proximity of another craft during a fog.

Precedent was broken when the spectators accorded the slim flier an ovation as he finished his testimony and hurried away.

enbush has been forced to make sharp curtailments in staff.

Members of the committee are said to feel the present force is inadequate to throw into large concerns involved in testimony already uncovered. They intend to cite recent committee revelations as a "sample" of what they can do if an extended authorization is granted.

To make existing funds stretch over early phases of the inquiry, it has been necessary to borrow talent from a number of Government departments, these members point out.

Strong opposition is expected to develop in the Senate, however, to any extension of the investigation to companies not primarily concerned with munitions. Opponents are expected to claim damage to American business, without any compensating advantage to the cause of international good will.

Letter Given Up.

In this connection, the committee yesterday turned over to the State Department a confidential letter long sought by the Chinese government, one of the many nations that entered into informal representations with this Government as a result of committee disclosures.

The letter, only vaguely referred to in open testimony, concerned a 5 per cent commission allegedly paid to officials high in the Chinese military administration by a representative of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Co. Earlier, transcripts of other testimony were supplied a number of South American governments. Four unpublished cablegrams, bearing on negotiations for an Argentine powder factory, were delivered to that government.

In the absence of Chairman Nye, recuperating from a brief illness at his home in North Dakota, Investigator Raushenbush and his staff are maintaining a discreet silence on the course of committee operations. It was indicated this silence will not be broken until hearings resume again, early in December, although Raushenbush may have a statement to make in a day or two by way of summarizing testimony already published.

In an informed quarter, it was learned however, that members are anxious to strip Sir Basil Zaharoff of still more of his reputed "mystery."

Possible Clew.

A letter in the committee's possession furnishes a clew to a possible financial interest owned by the international munitions dealer in the Electric Boat Co.

Whether that interest is held through one of more than a score of brokerage firms which have owned Electric Boat shares, or whether it is held by proxy through a private agent, is a point Chairman Nye is anxious to clear up.

So scattered are holdings in the company, the committee is attempting to get the information by correspondence. It is said to be altogether improbable any attempt will be made to subpena brokers' records, although the committee holds this whip. Officials of Electric Boat Co. have informed the committee they do not know who holds Sir Basil's shares, if, in fact, he has any.

One angle being explored by the committee is Zaharoff's reputed friendship for Albert H. Wiggin, former chairman of the board of the Chase National Bank.

Witness Enrages Hauptmann At N. Y. Extradition Hearing

Hauptmann was the abductor-murderer of Baby Lindbergh—were offered in evidence after Albert D. Osborn, noted handwriting expert, declared his belief they were written by Hauptmann.

The prisoner was recalled to the stand after Wilentz rested his case. Fawcett handed him all the ransom notes, asked him to study them.

"Is that your handwriting?" Fawcett asked.

"This is not my handwriting. It is the first time I have ever seen these papers."

Denies Being in Jersey.

"Were you ever in the State of New Jersey in January, February, March or April, 1932?"

"No, I was not."

"Did you ever see Millard Whited before?"

"Just once—in the Bronx County Courthouse."

Whited was called after a tedious cross-examination of Osborn by Fawcett and after two New York police officials—Inspectors John J. Lyons and Henry Bruckman—were called by Wilentz to deny the statement of Hauptmann yesterday that he had informed police he had hidden money in his garage before ransom bills were found there.

The hearing on Huaptmann's petition for a writ of habeas corpus—by which the prisoner hopes to avoid extradition to Jersey—reached its climax with Whited's identification.

After stating he was a farmer and logger in the Sourland Mountain neighborhood of the Lindbergh home, and lived but a mile and half from the flier's home, Wilentz asked:

"Did you know everybody that lived in that vicinity?"

A. I did.

Q. Sometime in February, between that time and the first day of March, did you see any strangers in the vicinity of the Lindbergh residence?

A. I did.

Q. Do you know Bruno Hauptmann?

A. Only by seeing him on the mountain. (Sourland).

Q. Did you see Bruno Hauptmann in the vicinity of your home any time in February, 1932?

A. I did.

Q. Did you during the month of February, 1932, see some man in the vicinity of the Lindbergh home whom you have since identified?

A. I did.

Q. Do you see that man in the courtroom?

A. I do.

Q. Will you indicate him?

A. Right there.

Identifies the Accused.

"Will you walk down to him, with the court's permission?" Wilentz asked.

Whited arose. Justice Hammer warned everyone to maintain order. Deputies cleared a path across the courtroom. Whited walked directly up to Hauptmann, tapped him on the shoulder, returned to the witness chair. Hauptmann gulped, his face was blanched. He glared at his accuser.

Whited then related he first saw Hauptmann between the 18th and 20th of February; the second time, between the 25th and 27th of the same month.

"The first time you saw him," Wilentz asked, "Where was he?"

A. About a mile from Lindbergh's driveway, stepping out of a piece of timberland that belonged to me.

Q. How far from the Lindbergh home?

A. Not over three-quarters of a mile.

Tells of Encounters.

It was near noon on both occasions that he saw Hauptmann, Whited said.

Q. Why do you recall that you saw this man Hauptmann on either or both occasions?

A. Because he was a stranger that stepped in front of me.

Q. Was that an unusual occurence in that vicinity?

A. It is.

Q. What sort of a section is it?

A. Some would call it a wilderness.

On the night Baby Lindbergh was snatched from his crib and died as a result of the kidnaping, Whited said he recalled seeing the stranger and gave his information to the Jersey State police.

On cross-examination he told Fawcett he did not see photographs of Hauptmann in the newspapers; that he never saw a photograph of the German until State police brought one to his house soon after Hauptmann's arrest.

"Why," Wilentz asked, "did you have any doubts about this relator (Hauptmann)?"

Witness Turns Questioner.

A. Why would he be coming off property belonging to me?

Q. Is that the only reasoh you had any doubt about him?—A. Why would he be wandering through the bushes on my woods when it is not gunning season?

Q. Did you ever see anybody but a native on your property?—A. Only during gunning season.

Fawcett interrogated Whited in detail as to his meeting with Hauptmann, but the Jersey lumberman stood steadfast in his identification and answered all questions without hesitation.

With Whited's dismissal, Fawcett immediately, called the three Hopewell neighbors.

The first, William G. Whited, a cousin of the farmer, was asked:

Q. What is the last witness' reputation in the community of Hopewell respecting veracity and honesty?—A. Not much.

Q. Well, is it good or bad?—A. Bad.

Failed to Help In Slaying King Prisoner Says

Found He Couldn't Fire Into Crowd, Suspect Tells Police.

Paris, Oct. 16 (AP).—France tonight was striving to keep the Marseille murders from becoming another Serajevo as police at Melun tore from Mio Kraj, third terrorist suspect jailed, an admission that he was sent to Marseille to kill King Alexander of Yugoslavia.

While the French determination to have Hungary clean up the alleged terrorist ring that plotted Alexander's death equaled that of the Little Entente, France nevertheless was eager to keep tempers even and prevent the Balkan powder keg's flaring up again.

Yugoslavia, mourning its dead monarch, was expected here to demand explanations from Hungary of its alleged tolerance at Danka Puszta of the Ustashi, Croat revolutionary organization headed by Dr. Ante Pavelich, which police charge with the assassinations.

Confession Announced.

The surete nationale announced that Kraj, alias Sylvester Chalny or Malny, who was known to his Ustashi fellows as "Scarface" and "The Strong," confessed at Melun that he was sent to Marseille with Vlada Georgieff Tschernocemsky, alias Petrus Kalemen, to stage the assassination of Alexander.

He said, in broken German:

"I am a Croat. What I did and what I wanted to do were for Croatian liberty."

[The province of Croatia, in Yugoslavia, has long been stirred by agitation for its autonomy or independence of the Belgrade government.]

Kraj told authorities that the thought of shooting into the crowd made him quail, so he fled the scene of the assassination for fear that Kalemen would shoot him down for his hesitancy.

Identified by Others.

His confession named Egon Kvaternick, or Kramer, as the "delegate" of Dr. Ante Pavelich, chief of the revolutionary society, and the man who ordered him to Marseille.

[Ivan Rajtich and Zvonemer Pospechil, two other confessed members of the band who are held at Annecy, identified Kvaternik variously as "the delegate" and "the doctor."]

"I regret nothing," Kraj was reported to have told police.

A dispatch from Sofia, Bulgaria, today said the Marseille assassin had been identified definitely as Vlada Georgieff Tchernozemsky, Macedonian revolutionist.

Political implications of the tragedy at Marseille concerned Paris almost as much as the hunt for the assassin band as French diplomacy strove to avert increased friction between Italy and Yugoslavia.

Frightened lest declarations published in the press that Italian money helped support Balkan terrorist groups might stir new hatred, the French were hastening preparations for the visit to Rome of Pierre Laval, new foreign minister.

It was Louis Barthou, murdered beside Alexander at Marseille, who conceived the hope for Italo-French understanding and consequently for friendship between Italy and France's ally, Yugoslavia, and it was in pursuance of that hope that he invited Alexandria to France.

Benes' Visit Probable.

A quarter close to the Government said tonight that Edward Benes, Prime Minister of Czechoslovakia and guiding spirit in the Little Entente, probably would visit Rome after Laval "in order to show everyone that sincere cooperation among France, Italy and the Little Entente is an essential factor for the maintenance of peace in central and eastern Europe."

The surete announced that Kalemen's identification as Vladimir Georgieff Tchernozemsky, also called "Vlado the Chauffeur," who had been convicted of two assassinations in Bulgaria in 1925, was made through finger prints.

He was under sentence of death, the surete said, but was liberated through an amnesty in 1932, and fled Bulgaria.

Scolded as Girl Teaser, Schoolboy Kills Himself

Los Angeles, Oct. 16 (AP).—After being reprimanded several times in school for teasing girls and having an altercation with a classmate, 12-year-old Joseph Anguili committed suicide today by hanging himself, Detective Lieut. Ralph Stites reported.

The youth's teacher, Miss Alma Tucker, told police Joseph handed her a note today before the noon recess, in which he stated in a childish scrawl that she would be "sorry for accusing him falsely."

200,000 Honor Yugoslav King; Guard Notables

Elaborate Plans Made to Protect Crowned Heads at Funeral.

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

Belgrade, Oct. 16.—More than 200,000 Yugoslav mourners filed by King Alexander's body today as the government laid elaborate plans to protect the crowned heads and notables of Europe coming here for his funeral.

A special religious service was attended by King Carol, Dowager Queen Marie and Princess Ileana of Rumania, the widowed Queen Marie and Prince Paul of Yugoslavia.

Leaving Sofia at midnight for Belgrade was King Boris of Bulgaria, who only last month was Alexander's host at a meeting that saw an ancient Balkan enmity between Bulgaria and Yugoslavia end in kisses and embraces.

Lest the life of Carol, who arrived today; Boris, who is expected tomorrow, and the other great of the continent be snuffed out as was Alexander's at Marseille, every arm of Yugoslavia's police, secret service and military organization reached out for terrorist conspirators.

King Peter Carefully Guarded.

Evidence of the panic gripping all Balkan governments was shown by secrecy surrounding Carol's departure, Boris' change in plans and this government's extraordinary precautions.

Carefully guarded, too, was 11-year-old King Peter II, successor of the slain monarch.

Today even foreign and native newspapermen and photographers saw their rooms and baggage searched for fear they had explosives concealed. Cameramen were forbidden to photograph Carol as he arrived or the king's body as it lay in state.

Hotels and Homes Searched.

All hotels and private homes are being searched, while residences along the line of the funeral cortege have been ordered to have no guests the day of the funeral.

With Boris and Carol, President Albert Lebrun of France filled out the trio of heads of nations to attend the funeral, but King George of England sent his fourth son, the Duke of Kent, whose romance with Princess Marina of Greece began here.

Boris' decision to attend the funeral touched Yugoslav officials, who saw in it further proof of the new-found friendship established by Boris and Alexander.

New York, Oct. 16 (AP).—Deposits of Alleghany Corporation 5s of 1950 under the company's plan to pay interest for the next five years with 5 per cent cumulative preferred stock now amount to $15,605,000, or more than 63 per cent of the issue.

$2,500,000 Damage In Manila Typhoon

Manila, Oct. 16 (AP).—Blanketed with the debris of the worst typhon in years, Manila and nearby districts stood in darkness and desolation tonight while the lists of dead and homeless grew longer.

At midnight the death toll was 10 persons. The homeless numbered into the thousands. Damage estimates for Manila alone ranged as high as $2,500,000 and full reports had not been received from other stricken areas.

Meager information indicated 3,000 families were homeless in Bulucan and Rizal provinces, adjoining Manila. Bamboo and palm-thatched huts crumpled under the force of the storm.

Manila police said 2,000 to 3,000 houses were blown down or unroofed in the capital. Gov. Gen. Frank Murphy previously had issued an estimate lower than this. His comparatively early report indicated not more than 300 Manila families were homeless.

The governor general declared a bank holiday, ordered the 400 convicts taken from prison to help clean up the ruins and directed that $500,000 be set aside for relief and reconstruction.

Striking Luzon Island during the early hours this morning, the typhoon roared away toward the northwest. The wind reached a velocity of 57 miles an hour in Manila. In the 24-hour period ended at 4 p. m., 11½ inches of rain fell in Manila. The precipitation continued tonight. Streets were flooded. The grounds of Malacanan Palace, residence of the Governor General, became virtual lakes.

After enduring the storm throughout the day, the city, with its population of 325,000, was left in darkness. Authorities said that it would be days before normal services could be restored.

The force of the storm drove a 5,000-ton ship, the American freighter Gertrude Kellogg, up into a street between two piers. The American - owned salvage vessel Atlantic Gulf also was driven aground, as were two inter-island boats, the Ulysses and the Gregory, and many smaller craft.

Marine sources said the two largest ships probably could be refloated, but the inter-island vessels might not be salvageable.

Twenty hours late, the-round-the world liner President Johnson sailed from Manila tonight after narrowly escaping a collision with the Gertrude Kellogg. The latter rammed a pier next to the President Johnson as she was being driven ashore and began veering toward the Johnson.

The Weather Bureau said it had been unable to issue a warning of the approach of the typhoon because of failure to receive telegraphic advices.

Waycross, Ga., Oct. 16 (AP).—A pair of socks, please, and be sure they are slash.

That, says Alex K. Sessoms, south Georgia timber owner and member of the Georgia Forestry Commission, is not likely to be too far distant and it won't mean a new style of sock colors.

Instead, the customer will be asking for socks made from slash pine, a product that may become possible through the experiments of Dr. Charles H. Herty, of Savannah.

Addressing the Kiwanis Club here, Mr. Sessoms explained how experiments now being carried on are expected to produce rayon yarn from which it will be possible to make sox and other wearing apparel.

U. S. Naval Men And Japanese Reach England

British Adopt Umpire Role in Effort to Preserve Treaty Limits.

London, Oct. 16 (AP).—Representatives of Japan and the United States came to England today to attempt to chart the course of the 1935 naval conference.

Admiral Isoroku Yamamoto, Tokyo's delegate, said at Southampton Japan will decide at the conclusion of the conversations whether to denounce the Washington treaty. He indicated Japan would accept a suitable compromise, and pleaded for joint cooperation by the three powers in an effort to conclude the conversations successfully.

Norman H. Davis and Rear Admiral William H. Standley, of the United States, arrived at Plymouth and were met by British Admirals Fullerton and Binney.

"We do not come here to make any agreement," said Davis, who would not make a prophecy as to the future of the conference.

The Japanese admiral avoided reference to a discussion of political questions, saying everything depends upon consultations he will have with Tsuneo Matsudaira, Japanese Ambassador to London.

Yamamoto said his program for meeting the British and Americans will be completed in a few days. The British hope by adopting the impartial role of umpire to effect a compromise and save naval limitation.

Roosevelt Acts For U. S. Curb Of 'Stretch-out'

3 Work Assignment Boards Directed to 'Freeze' Textile Schedules.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

President Roosevelt last night set in motion machinery to bring the "stretch-out," for years the chief source of labor trouble in the textile industry, under the direct control of impartial Government agencies.

He issued four Executive orders creating, under a common chairman, three "work assignment boards" for the cotton, silk and wool textile industries, which were directed to "freeze" work schedules as of September 21.

In thus establishing an entirely new system to regulate the machine loads required of workers, the President followed closely the recommendations of the Winant board of inquiry, whose report ended last month's widespread strike.

To Report by January 1.

The new boards, in each case, are to be named by the Textile Labor Relations Board. Besides the general chairman, they will be composed of a representative of the employers and a member named by labor. Together, they are to report, by January 1, on a permanent plan for controlling work assignments.

In the last of the Executive Orders, the President—again adhering to the Winant report—provided that the recommendations for a permanent plan shall contain the following principles, "unless good cause is shown to the contrary:"

No employer shall increase any work assignments until he has obtained approval from the district impartial chairman (to be named by the Textile Work Assignment Board) of the district in which the mill operates.

The district chairman, on petition by the representatives of any employes, shall investigate the justifiability of existing labor assignments, and if he finds any assignment involves excessive work, shall require the employer to reduce the assignment.

Decisions of the district chairman, either in approving an increase in work assignments (after six weeks' notice) or in ordering reductions, shall be subject to appeal to the Textile Work Assignment Board, whose decision shall be final.

In setting up the temporary organization, President Roosevelt made use of authority granted him to amend the code of competition governing the three industries. The cotton and silk manufacturing codes were changed directly, while the wool textile code was made subject to a new set of regulations.

Schedules Fixed.

The cotton and silk textile industries were ordered to maintain the same schedule of work assignments in effect on September 21 until February 1, subject to certain concessions. The same principle was made effective as to the wool industry, whose code already provides for "freezing" the work load on employes.

In addition, any of the work assignment boards, "on petition of any employe or employer affected, or his representative, or on its own motion," may undertake investigations of work assignments which have been increased since July 1, 1933. If the board determines, after a hearing, that such assignments are excessive it may require reductions.

The "stretch-out" was one of the major factors in the recent strike that tied up most of the Nation's textile factories. The Winant report, recognizing the claims of the workers that they were suffering under the system, recommended the procedure which the President followed, to the letter, in his orders.

The new set-up was instituted without comment on the part of the White House. It followed a conference the President had earlier in the day with Donald R. Richberg, coordinator, and S. Clay Williams, chairman of the new NRA administrative board.

Stable Emotion Is Vital to Life, Dietitians Told

'Depression Psychoses' Are Worrying Social Students, Says Dr. MacLear.

"People must be healthy in their emotional lives or the most carefully planned diet will fail," declared Dr. Martha MacLear, of the psychology department of Wilson Teachers College, Washington, in addressing the convention of the American Dietetic Association yesterday.

Federal alphabetical bureaus have been set up to provide food, clothing and shelter, she pointed out, in discussing the preventive aspects of mental hygiene, but such attention is ineffectual unless emotional and mental stability prevails.

"The past five years of anxiety and worry have produced depression psychoses that take the form of a feeling of personal guilt or of a persecution complex," she went on. The Child Guidance Bureau and the Life Adjustment Center in Washington were particularly concerned with the latter type, Dr. MacLear said.

Emotional stability should be developed in the childhood days, she concluded, for it is the people who have developed psychoses over a period of years that have been hardest hit by the depression.

Other Speakers.

Mr. MacLear's talk was one of the features of the second day's program which also included a discussion of "A Japanese Dietary Department," by Helen Pond, of St. Luke's International Hospital, Tokyo, Japan; a summary of the services offered by the Bureau of Home Economics, by Dr. Louise Stanley, of the Department of Agriculture; and a speech entitled "Maintaining Food Standards," by Emma T. Hahm, of the Allies Inn.

Results of elections of annual officers were announced yesterday as follows:

Katharine Mitchell, chief dietitian, Michael Reese Hospital, Chicago, Ill., president-elect; Lute Troutt, chief dietitian, University Hospital, Indianapolis, Ind., first vice president; Ruth Atwater, director of home economics, National Canners' Association, Washington, second vice president; Beulah Becker Marble, chief dietitian, Huntington Memorial Hospital, Boston, Mass., secretary, and Ella Eck, chief dietitian, University Clinics, University of Chicago, Ill., treasurer.

Miss Comstock President.

The presidency of the association has been assumed by Laura Comstock, nutrition adviser of the Eastman Kodak Co., Rochester, N. Y. She automatically becomes president following her designation as president-elect at last year's meeting.

Members of the nominating committee were Helen B. Anderson, Scripps Metabolic Clinic, La Jolla, Calif.; Lillian Storms, Gerber Products Co., Freemont, Mich.; P. Mabel Nelson, home economics department, Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa; Mary Northrop, Kings County Hospital, Seattle, Wash., and Virginia H. Ray, Albany Hospital, Albany, N. Y.

Scheduled on the program today are Dr. Mary Schwartz Rose, of Columbia University, who will talk on "What Kind of Nutrition Teaching Does the Public Get from Its Reading?" at the morning session; and Dr. Martin E. Rehfuss, of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, Pa., who will discuss "Diet and Dietary Fadism" in the afternoon.

The annual banquet, with Mrs. Quindara Oliver Dodge, retiring president, presiding, will be held at 7 p. m.

Contempt Case Hearing Today

Palumbo Accused of Tryin to Influence Juror in Gambling Case.

Louis Palumbo, cited last week by Justice James M. Proctor for contempt of court, will be tried today in the District Supreme Court.

The charge is that Palumbo approached Charles William Powers, prospective juror in a gambling case, and told him he "would make it well worth his while," if the latter voted not guilty.

Powers was accepted as a member of a jury to try a gambling case the next day and had been sworn in when he told Prosecutor Roger Robb he could not serve. He then related the story of the alleged attempt by Palumbo to sway his verdict.

Assistant United States Attorney John W. Fihelly obtained a statement from Powers and presented to Justice Proctor a petition calling upon Palumbo to show cause why he should not be held in contempt.

Son Shields Mother In Rum Case; Both Free

Great Falls, Mont., Oct. 16 (AP).—A son's refusal to let his mother plead guilty to an Internal Revenue infraction won clemency for both in Federal Court here today.

As her son, Edward Vaile, 23, pleaded guilty, the mother, who previously had admitted her guilt, shouted "He's not guilty!" She then presented affidavits claiming she had placed the incriminating liquor in her son's home. Both were given suspended jail sentences and placed on probation.

racy—were careful to keep their pledges not to discuss the case publically.

Practically all who have been called on for counsel showed more optimism, however, than ever before since the kidnaping took place a week ago tomorrow.

Officials detailed to the investigation hinted that the responsible person or persons were motivated by a desire to strike a blow at capitalism.

"I hardly think it is a professional gang," said Col. Edward Callahan, chief of police.

Harold Nathan, in charge of the Federal phase of the investigation, refused to comment.

Berry V. Stoll, husband of the missing woman, had stood near the telephone at his home, hopeful that word would come that the return of his wife was near.

"I am going to stay right by these telephones," he said. "I wouldn't leave them to grant any request."

Earlier he told reporters that he and his friends were "more hopeful." He indicated that his primary desire was to see his wife once more and that the capture of the kidnapers was secondary.

Household Armed.

He would not amplify his remarks and displayed a pistol to a later group of newsmen. Members of the household have been armed since the abduction.

During the day it became known that a private telephone had been installed in the house so that the abductor might feel free to communicate with Stoll without fear of being overheard.

Squads of police moved through the territory east of Louisville searching farms and vacant buildings in the hope that some clew might be discovered.

her captors evidently planning to return her according to agreement.

The arrest was made at Scottsberg, Ind., just across the Ohio River from Louisville. Mrs. Stoll was riding in an automobile accompanied by Mrs. Frances Robinson, wife of the alleged kidnaper, Thomas H. Robinson, jr., 22 years old, of Nashville, Tenn. Robinson was not in the car and has not been found.

In the automobile with Mrs. Stoll and Mrs. Robinson were the Rev. and Mrs. Arnold Clegg. Hoover emphasized that they had no connection with the kidnaping, but refused to throw any further light on their presence in the automobile.

The entire investigation centered around Louisville, Nashville and Indianapolis, Hoover said. The kidnaping occurred in Louisville. The ransom money was paid in Nashville and the first ransom notes, only a small amount, began to appear in circulation near Indianapolis.

Once Believed Insane.

As was predicted at the start of the case, the alleged kidnaper was revealed to be a man who had once been believed insane. His record shows that he was committed to the State Insane Asylum at Nashville in 1929 for observation. This followed his arrest on a charge of impersonating an officer. He was held in the institution only 30 days. A subsequent charge of robbery is pending against him in Nashville.

In connection with the announcement of Mrs. Stoll's safe recovery and the arrest of Mrs. Robinson, the Department of Justice made public the ransom note left by the kidnapers. It is a document of nearly 1,000 words written with a typewriter on legal size paper The typewriting is single spaced and completely covers two pages of the large-sized paper

Her Death Threatened.

The note referred to the kidnaping of the Lindbergh baby, William Hamm, jr., John Factor, Charles F. Urschel and Charles Boettcher 2d. It threatened that if the demand for $50,000 was not complied with or if any attempt was made to apprehend the writer, the victim's body would be burned and the ashes scattered in a stream of water, after which the galvanized tank in which the body was burned would be cleaned in such a manner as to defy microscopic examination.

The note instructed that the $50,000 should be placed in a small box and shipped to the intermediary by railway express within five days. Robinson was named as the intermediary. Printing on the note, lettered in the margin in pencil, indicated that the original intention was to kidnap Mr. Stoll. Some of the wording of the note indicated the same thing.

The charge against Robinson in 1929 was that he had represented himself to be an officer, gained entrance to the homes of two wealthy women, locked them in clothes closets and escaped with between $6,000 and $8,000 worth of jewelry. The charge was dropped after he was sent to the institution for the insane.

The charge which is still pending against him is that he picked up a young girl on the road in his automobile and then robbed her of her jewelry. It was also charged that he attempted to assault the girl. Following his arrest on these charges he jumped his bond and is believed to have gone to Chicago and obtained employment with the Century of Progress Exposition.

The first clew to the identity of the kidnaper came from fingerprints on the kidnap note itself. The note was rushed to Washington, where it was discovered that the fingerprints were those of Robinson. The penciled lettering on the margin of the note was shown to be in Robinson's handwriting.

Last Sunday an intimate friend of Mrs. Stoll received a telephone call from Indianapolis and this was followed by a letter postmarked at Indianapolis. It declared that the intermediary believed he was being watched and that the money should be turned over to Mrs. Frances Robinson, that she was the only person from whom the kidnaper would agree to accept the money. On Monday a similar letter was received by Berry V. Stoll, husband of the kidnaped woman. This letter also was postmarked at Indianapolis.

In accordance with instructions in the letter, the money was paid to Mrs. Robinson in Nashville. Mrs. Stoll is believed to have gone directly to Indianapolis where the ransom notes began to appear in circulation.

Hoover in announcing the return of Mrs. Stoll concluded his announcement with the statement:

Bingham NamesCommittee Seeking to Return Ship From London.

A new effort to return to the United States the plane in which the Wright brothers made their flight at Kitty Hawk, N. C., was begun yesterday.

Former Senator Hiram Bingham, of Connecticut, president of the National Aeronautic Association, named Edward P. Warner, former Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Aeronautics, to head a committee to request Orville Wright, the surviving brother, to bring his pioneer airplane back to this country.

Named to serve with Warner on the committee were Frank Hitchcock, Postmaster General under President Taft; Dr. George W. Lewis, director of aeronautical research for the National advisory committee on aeronautics; Earl N. Findley, editor of the United States Air Service, and Capt. William J. Tate, in whose home the Wrights lived while preparing for their flight.

Wright sent his plane abroad when he objected to the designation by the Smithsonian Institution of Emauel P. Langley's plane as the "first machine capable of flight carrying a man."

Back in 1928, the Smithsonian published a pamphlet outlining the cause of the breach between the institution and Mr. Wright, and requested Mr. Wright to accept an apology. No reply was received from him at the time.

Last year Col. Charles A. Lindbergh was named mediator in the dispute. The label to be placed beneath the famous plane of the Wrights was to be submitted to Orville Wright for approval, and the plane was to be displayed in a prominent place.

Nothing was ever done about the matter, however, although at the time Orville Wright was quoted as having said he was "delighted" at the suggestion.

The plane now is in the Science Museum in London. Thirty years after the historic flight at Kitty Hawk it remains there.

Small House Building Boom Seen in Spring

Financial Picture of Loan Groups Is Brighter, Declares Expert.

There will be a considerable revival of small home building in the spring, Morton Bodfish, of Chicago, executive secretary of the United States Building & Loan League, predicted here yesterday. He reported the rental situation improving and the financial picture of building and loan groups generally brighter.

More than half the total number of building and loan associations are in a position to loan money, Bodfish said. Their borrowings from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have totaled about $115,00,000, of which about half already has been repaid.

"The problem that is troubling us is to find sound loans," he pointed out. "We feel that the publicity which the FHA folks have given has had a very good effect. In other words, we are beginning to get a much better loan response than we did some time ago.

"Withdrawals of savings from our institutions have practically ceased and it looks like the flow of savings has started in the other direction.

"Despite all the clamor about the lack of mortgage lending, our figures, compiled for our annual convention, to be held in New Orleans next week, show that during the last year the building and loan associations of the country loaned in excess of $400,000,000."

Fletcher's Home Town Without Relief Project

Greencastle, Pa., Oct. 15 (Spl.).—While Henry P. Fletcher, chairman of the Republican National committee, charges the Administration with using relief funds for political purposes, his home town, normally a strong Republican community, goes projectless, it became known here today. The borough council recently turned down a $6,000 white-collar project approved by the burgess, who is a Democrat, and has not as yet had any other projects scheduled.

Guard Asked

Protection to Be Added at Martinsburg Mills.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Oct. 16 (Spl.).—A citizens' committee of 75 business and professional men, meeting last night, named a committee to work with Mayor C. H. Dailey in increasing the seven-man city police force to one ample to provide complete protection to all wishing to work in the two strike-closed mills here, Berkeley Woolen Co. and Interwoven Mills, Inc.

Letters from the heads of these mills were read, stating definitely that unless labor conditions became settled very shortly the two plants would be abandoned permanently. Interwoven employs normally about 1,500 and Berkeley Woolen Co. about 350.

Threats of violence against officials and office workers at the plants recently stirred public sentiment to calling the general meeting. A second meeting of the citizens' committee tonight will hear reports of the committee's work.

Sentries Pace Prison in Ohio As Dillinger Thug Faces Chair

Harry Pierpont Will Die Tonight for Murder of Lima Sheriff.

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 16 (U.P.).—Sentries paced the walls of Ohio Penitentiary tonight and plain-clothes guards watched approaches, while final preparations were made for the execution of Harry Pierpont, last survivor of the once-dangerous Dillinger gang and first of its leaders to die in the electric chair.

The Pierpont death warrant states his conviction of murder in the death of Sheriff Jess Sarber, of Lima, Ohio, and sets tomorrow as the date for his death.

Indications were that he will die soon after midnight, although Warden P. E. Thomas maintained close secrecy over his plans. The warden and Gov. White have received threatening letters, purportedly from friends of the doomed gangster.

The warden's wife served Pierpont the usual chicken dinner. He ate indifferently. A barber visited his cell to prepare him for the death cap.

Pierpont received a last visit from his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Pierpont, of Lakeville, Ind. When they left he became restive, but remained sullenly silent.

He spurned spiritual comfort offered by prison Chaplain Sullivan, threw himself on his cot and stared vacantly at the corridor where he had seen his confederate, Charles Makley, killed by guards in an attempted escape. Makley and Pierpont were convicted of slaying the sheriff in liberating John Dillinger from the Lima Jail. Russell Clark, also convicted, was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Pierpont told his parents he "preferred execution to life imprisonment," and asked that they drop efforts to obtain clemency.

Garden Federation to Take Up New Constitution and By-Laws

Williamsburg Tour to Feature Meeting at Richmond.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 16 (AP).—A new constitution and by-laws will be presented before the business meeting of the Virginia Federation of Garden Clubs at its second annual meeting here Thursday and Friday.

The federation has been functioning under a provisional constitution while a study of its needs and requirements was being made. Although the new constitution will follow the general lines of the temporary one, a number of important changes and additions, particularly with respect to representation and to the constituency of the executive board, will be submitted.

A total of 100 registrations has been submitted to Mrs. William Gay Smith, registration chairman with prospect of additional registrations coming in despite the time limit set last week.

Mrs. Ambrose C. Ford of Clifton Forge, president of the federation, has announced that two new clubs have come into the federation within the last few days. They are the Pamlico Garden Club of Norfolk and the Woodrow Wilson Club of Staunton.

A nominating committee meeting has been scheduled for noon Thursday, and the executive board will meet Thursday afternoon. After a dinner there will be a business meeting, and the annual election of officers.

A feature of the meeting will be a tour of colonial Williamsburg.

Oklahoma City Ministers Plan 'Divorce Clinic'

Oklahoma City, Oct. 16 (AP).—A "divorce clinic" to treat marital ills is being planned by Oklahoma City ministers.

Individual ministers have aided in pacification of quarreling couples in the past, but the organizers agreed the proposed "clinic" would reach more troubled couples.

"It will be decidedly worthwhile if people feel that it is a menace to our social order," said the Rev. James Mills of St. Paul's Episcopal. "For those who are willing to listen and are ready to try to follow advice, many divorces can be avoided."

The plan, evolved by Dr. W. A. McKeever, psychologist, calls for specialization of certain ministers upon certain problems, recognized as the most common causes of divorce, in order to bring the widest experience and training in arranging marital truces.

Baptists Move To Reduce Debt

Mission Board to Extend Restricted Program 2 More Years.

Richmond, Oct., 16 (AP).—The foreign mission board of the Southern Baptist convention, although encouraged by reports of increased income, decided today to adhere to a restricted program for the next two years in order to further reduce its indebtedness, which now stands at approximately $959,000.

Upon recommendation of Dr. Charles E. Maddry, at its semiannual meeting here, the board voted unanimously to hold the present number of 394 missionaries on foreign fields under 400 for the two-year period and to apply on the debt whatever funds could be saved.

More than $122,000 already has been payed on the debt, the board was told, and the budget receipts for the first eight months of 1934 show an increase of $146,000 over the same period last year.

Robert Stanley Jones, of Bowling Green, Ky., was elected field representative of the board to have headquarters in Richmond and assist Dr. Maddry, the executive secretary. Dr. Jones was a missionary to Brazil for 12 years and served as president of the Baptist College in Pernambuco before returning to the United States, where he has more recently engaged in missionary education and promotion work.

Officers of the board for the coming year were elected as follows: L. Howard Jenkins, president; J. H. Anderson, vice president; W. A. Harris, recording secretary; Charles E. Maddry, executive secretary; Jessie R. Ford, office secretary; Isabelle G. Coleman, publicity secretary; E. P. Buxton, treasurer; B. M. Gwathmey, auditor; Dr. J. G. Loving, medical examiner; Hill Montague, attorney, and Mary Hunter, manager of book store.

Bottle Adrift 2 Years Yields A 'Fan' Letter for Al Smith

New York, Oct. 16 (AP).—Alfred E. Smith showed friends today the newest addition to his collection of "fan" mail—a letter dropped in a bottle from the S. S. Manhattan in Midatlantic two years ago. The bottle bobbed about the ocean until a month ago, when it was washed ashore at County Wexford, Irish Free State.

James Gleeson, walking along the beach, found the bottle, noticed the paper rolled inside, noted the contents and forwarded the letter to the former Governor.

Aboard the S. S. Manhattan, four persons had entered a political discussion. Tom Reed, an executive of motion pictures; Mrs. Reed, the Rev. W. A. von Goebelins, of Pewaukee, Wis., and Frank Loughlin, a New York engineer. It was October 10, 1932.

They agreed on their liking for the 1928 Democratic Presidential candidate and decided on the unusual manner of conveying to him their thoughts.

They put the letter into a bottle, corked it and tossed it overboard 1,700 miles out of New York.

Because of its personal nature, Smith declined to make public the contents of the letter. It paid tribute to his statesmanship.

Grand Jurors To Weigh Bell Case Saturday

Fredericksburg, Va., Oct. 16 (Spl.).—Grand jury investigation of charges against E. C. Bell, accused of poisoning his invalid wife, will take place Saturday at a special court session ordered today by Corporation Court Justice Frederick C. Coleman.

Preliminary hearing in police court had previously been set for November 8. Calling the special session followed a request for immediate grand jury action by Prosecuting Attorney Albert V. Bryan.

W. W. Butzner, one of Bell's defense attorneys, said today that no knowledge of the special session was held by defense counsel until Judge Coleman signed the order this morning. He declined to comment further on the case.

Bell has been under $5,000 bond since his original hearing and arrest last Wednesday. If the grand jury returns an indictment Saturday, the time for a corporation court trial will be set by Judge Coleman.

Grand jurymen designated for service are Edwin A. Gibson, S. M. Janney, W. H. Owen, A. Flynn Dickson, J. E. Timberlake, and B. L. Melton.

Acting Commonwealth Attorney Bryan said he had requested the special session to "expedite the trial." He said he had gathered all the necessary evidence and wished to eliminate the formality of a police court hearing.

Cornish Willing To Defy Lethal Gas

Would Enter Death Chamber to Revive Condemned.

Berkeley, Calif., Oct. 16 (AP).—Despite the unwillingness of Colorado, Nevada and Arizona authorities to permit him to attempt revivification of criminals executed in the lethal gas chambers of those States, Dr. Robert E. Cornish declared today he was "not going to give up."

"I've been doing this work for seven years and I'm going to continue working on it," he declared in his laboratory as he watched the recovery progress of another mongrel pup which he revived after having put it to death clinically.

Dr. Cornish said he had been informed Matt Penrose, Nevada State Penitentiary warden, was not against the experiment if the scientists were willing to dash into the gas-filled execution chamber.

"I'd be willing to try holding my breath or wearing a gas mask," Dr. Cornish said.

Some time ago Cornish announced he had received offers from 20 individuals, some seeking money and others volunteering to let him experiment with them. He had refused, he said, because in addition to ethical reasons failure would constitute "murder."

Judge to Speed His Opinion on Railroad Act

Hope of Ruling in 2 Weeks Because of Immense Sums Involved.

Because the railroads subject to the provisions of the railroad retirement act will be called upon for an initial aggregate payment of approximately $15,000,000 by November 1, Chief Justice A. A. Wheat in the District Supreme Court yesterday indicated he would attempt to speed determination of the act's constitutionality.

Informed at the conclusion of a two weeks' hearing that unless his ruling was forthcoming shortly the carriers would be forced to pay immense sums for preliminary operations of the railroad retirement board, the chief justice said he hoped to be able to sift through the thousands of pages of testimony and argument within two weeks.

Hammond E. Chaffetz, special assistant to the Attorney General, and E. A. McInnis, general counsel for the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad, were the concluding speakers yesterday. All along McInnis has assumed an active part in the assault the carriers are making on the "social legislation" which, they say, will cost them $60,000,000 a year or more.

Designed to Protect Aged.

The act was designed to protect aged railroad employes from being discharged without insuring their old-age comfort. The carriers are called upon to pay into a general treasury a certain amount of the wages they pay their employes, and the employes likewise contribute a small percentage.

Shortly after the act was signed by President Roosevelt the carriers sought a court order prohibiting the Railroad Retirement Board from putting preliminary operations of the act into effect.

Power Lacking, They Claim.

They contended the act was unconstitutional because Congress did not possess sufficient power under its interstate commerce authority or under the "commerce clause" of the Constitution to enact the legislation. They charged that thousands of workers who were not properly subject to Federal regulation would be affected.

The carriers lost their first skirmish for a temporary restraining order when Justice James M. Proctor, before whom the initial hearing was held, decided the injury to the carriers through the regulations then under promulgation by the board were of such an insignificant nature that no serious harm would be done the roads even if a later decision held the act unconstitutional. It was shown the board then contemplated assessments of no more than $6,000 from any carrier.

The present hearing was on a motion for a temporary injunction, and this was changed into a final hearing when both sides requested it. Both the carriers and the board have indicated they would appeal an adverse ruling.

Ritchie Asks Support of Ticket In Party Rally at Dorchester

Harmony Rules as 1,500 Democrats Meet in Cambridge.

Cambridge, Md., Oct. 16 (Spl.).—Dorchester Democrats met last night, 1,500 strong, in the Opera House in one of the most harmonious mass meetings in the history of the party here.

Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, seeking reelection, appealed for the support of the entire ticket. He asked for votes for himself, "despite the primary, in which many persons voiced their preference for another to me."

Gov. Ritchie failed to carry Dorchester in the primary by about 450 votes.

"The primary is forgotten now," Ritchie said, "and I trust that the Democratic voters will unite in one solid phlanx for the benefit of every man on the ticket."

He said that it was imperative that a full Democratic ticket be elected in order that the program of the Roosevelt Administration may continue to function, and that old-age pensions, unemployment, relief, and similar measures may make for a better country.

For George L. Radcliffe, senatorial candidate, in was a homecoming, and the townpeople gave him a big reception. Mr. Radcliffe reviewed briefly some of his duties as public works administrator of Maryland, and challenged the statement by the opposition that "Maryland, under Gov. Ritchie was not supporting the Federal Administration." Mr. Radcliffe said that no other State has cooperated more fully.

Other candidates who spoke included Herbert R. O'Conor, for attorney general; William S. Gordy, for comptroller; Representative T. Alan Goldsborough, and Thomas S. Young, for clerk of the court of appeals. Russell S. Davis, chairman of the campaign committee, presided at the meeting.

National Park Visitors Set Record This Year

The National parks were visited by more persons during the 1934 travel season, which ended September 30, than ever before in their history, Arno B. Cammerer, director of the National Park Service, said last night.

A campaign to "make 1934 a National park year" is credited with being largely responsible for the record number of 3,956,720 visitors to the parks. President Roosevelt's visits to Hawaii and Glacier National Park played a large part in widely advertising the service, Mr. Cammerer said.

Shifflett Indicted In Murder of Wife

11 Others Also Will Face Trial at Martinsburg.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Oct. 16 (Spl.).—The grand jury in Berkeley County Circuit Court here today returned a murder indictment against Layton Shifflett, county farmer, for the murder of his wife at their home in July.

Shifflett is charged with so badly injuring his wife with a shotgun, while in a drunken rage, that she died while being rushed to a local hospital.

The grand jury also returned eleven other felony indictments, all for robbery.

Outdoor Advertisers Forego Signs in Parks

Chicago, Oct. 16 (AP).—The Outdoor Advertising Association of America, Inc., voted today to join with the National Association of Real Estate Boards to advance further the natural scenery of the Nation's highways by refraining from erecting signs in National, State or local parks.

The association, operating in 17,000 towns and now holding its annual convention, also voted not to erect signs on the inside of road curves or near railway crossings in any fashion as to be a menace to public safety.

Ihlder Named To Direct D. C. Housing Plan

James Ring Is Appointed Housing Expert's Aid in Program.

Committee that helped push the Capper-Norton bill to enactment.

Ring last year conducted a rental survey for the Public Utilities Commission at the instigation of the Senate District Committee and made a special study of living conditions in the poorer homes of the city. For several months he has been an assistant to People's Counsel William A. Roberts.

An administrative office will be set up at once, either in the District Building or in the Navy Department.

The Alley Authority, which adjourned subject to call by the chairman, Melvin C. Hazen, will first select two or three alleys on which to concentrate, it was said yesterday, but probably will proceed with the property purchasing secretly.

Housing Conference.

"We expect to do things first and talk about them later," Arno B. Cammerer, a member of the authority, said.

Simultaneous with the Alley Authority meeting a conference was in progress in the office of John Nolen, jr., director of planning for the Park and Planning Commission, on the low-cost housing undertaking of the Public Works Administration in Washington.

The parley was called by Nolen with the aim of coordinating the PWA project with all other phases of development of the National Capital, he said.

"We want the PWA low-cost housing construction to be coordinated with plans for school building, the opening of new streets, and the like," Nolen explained.

While the initial problem of the conferees is the PWA housing project, Nolen said that attention later would be directed to the alley clearance program.

One Site Selected.

Col. Horatio B. Hackett, director of the PWA housing division, said that a tentative site has been selected for the colored settlement and a decision is expected shortly on the site for the white housing group. The PWA has allocated $4,300,000 for the two projects.

Present at the housing conference were Robert Mitchell, Angelo Clas, and H. Tudor Morsell, of the PWA housing division; Capt. Howard F. Clark, assistant engineer commissioner; Garnet C. Wilkinson, assistant superintendent of schools, and Nolen.

Following the Alley Authority meeting, its members, together with Ihlder and Ring, were invited to the conference.

Further parleys will be called, Nolen said, as progress is made on the low-cost housing program.

Willard H. Barse, Hotel Man, Is Dead

Willard H. Barse, manager and operator of Washington hotel a decade ago, died Monday at his home in Malone, N. Y., after a lingering illness. He was 57 and is survived by his wife.

Mr. Barse came to Washington in 1913 after serving 12 years as assistant manager of the old Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York. His first assignment here was the refurnishing and opening of the old Shoreham Hotel, which he managed for a year, after which he returned to Long Beach, N. Y., where he leased the Nassau Hotel.

In 1921 he returned to Washington to manage the Lee House. At a gala celebration held Thanksgiving Day, 1922, Mr. Barse formally opened the Hamilton Hotel. Later he returned to New York, where he directed the Gramercy Park Hotel, moving to Annapolis in 1926, where he owned and managed Carvel Hall until his retirement two years ago.

Otis Steel Refuses Offer of Merger

Cleveland, Oct. 15 (AP).—Directors of the Otis Steel Co., today voted not to accept an offer to join the merger of the Corrigan-McKinney Steel Co., and the Republic Steel Corporation.

E. J. Kulas, president of Otis, said "two tentative proposals have been made for the acquiring of the Otis Steel Co. by the Republic Steel Corporation.

"These proposals have been analyzed carefully by our board of directors," an announcement from Kulas said. They have decided the proposed terms of acquisition were such that they could not recommend them to the shareholders of the Otis Steel Co."

Buying Power Rises 45 Pct., Asserts Davis

Consumer Demand Now to Control Further Farm Revival, He Says.

Chicago, Oct. 16 (AP).—Agricultural adjustment was said today by Chester C. Davis, farm administrator, to be entering its second phase, in which consumer demand will control further farm recovery.

As a result of AAA crop reduction programs and last summer's drought, supplies have been brought down to the level of effective demand, Davis told the American Institute of Meat Packers. In the future "farmers must look to further increases in the purchasing power of consumers if their gross income is to be further restored," he said, adding:

"For this reason that interdependence of agriculture and industry will have to be frankly and increasingly recognized in efforts to meet farm problems henceforth. * * * Efforts to revive both must be carried on simultaneously."

During the past year the purchasing power of factory pay rolls and purchasing power of farm products have increased about 45 per cent each, the Administrator declared.

"Thus it is clear that the ability of the country to buy from the city, and the ability of the city to buy from the country have both been improved," he said. "In part, we must look to the restoration of markets abroad, and in part, to further industrial recovery at home. These twin problems must be squarely faced by anyone who wishes to see the country restored to full economic health."

end, began raising funds for relief of the men and their families, starved like themselves during their self-entombment.

The first thought of the famished men was to get food for their families. But they were penniless.

Charitable shop keepers, however, sold them bread and bologna on credit and soon all the children of the mining district were running through the streets of the village munching great hunks of black bread.

Still Are Dissatisfied.

Hunger and thirst once satisfied, the miners were quick to express dissatisfaction with the settlement that ended their strike. Townspeople shared their feeling.

A winter bonus of $3, longer working time weekly and Christmas bonuses were promised the men, who had demanded wages of $3.50 weekly as compared with their present $2, and minimum three days of work weekly against two now.

testimony to have been among the first to leave the blazing liner in a lifeboat, was cited for failure "to go below in the engine and fire rooms to direct the engine room crew."

Crew Members Censured.

Abbott testified at the inquiry that he took to the boats on orders from the bridge.

Failure to supervise properly lowering of the lifeboats was the accusation against Second Officer Hackney. Third Officer Hansen was charged with not obeying the master's order to assist passengers into the boats.

Buijia, first assistant engineer, was, like his chief, charged with failing to stay by his post in the engine and fire rooms.

Members of the crew also were censured because they did not lead panic-stricken passengers to the boat deck by way of passages with which the sailors were familiar. Emphasis was placed on the testimony that six lifeboats lowered had a capacity of 408 persons but carried only 85, mostly crew members.

would not pay a higher price for milk to farmers until the council has ascertained production costs and has agreed that the farmers should receive more.

The council already has gone on record as opposing an increase in the price paid to the farmers, arguing that any such increase would be passed on in part at least to the consumer.

Mrs. Boyle said yesterday that Frank S. Walker, head of the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association, has submitted to Elwood Seal, assistant corporatino counsel, "some alleged cost material."

But these figures, she said, were "worthless" and would have to be supplanted by more timely figures.

Ross Garrett, coordinator of the Health and Hospital Council, told the meeting that the real answer to the milk problem was the designation of milk as a public utility.

Utility Operation.

"It should be handled just as light, gas or water," he said, "and the cost of it should be determined by a public utilities commission."

Dewey A. Anderson, of 3500 Woodley road, agreed that this might be a good idea, but pointed out that a public utilities commission, instead of regulating a utility, often is itself regulated by the utility.

Mr. Anderson thought that the best immediate solution of the problem here was the formation of a farmer-consumer cooperative.

It was announced that protests had been made against the increased price of ice in Washington, and an investigation was promised.

Good Will, Good Business.

A legal controversy over the proposed merger of the street car and bus companies serving Washington is an unfortunate sequel to the efforts of the Public Utilities Commission to bring about a rerouting of traction lines. Appeal to the courts will not dispose of the issue, but it may delay unification of the public transportation system and thereby complicate at least one part of the rerouting plan.

The Public Utilities Commission had no alternative to rejection of the Capital Transit Co.'s offer to pay $843,000 for 97 per cent of the stock of the Washington Rapid Transit Co., the bus line operator. The proposition was based upon the alleged value of the stock to the transit company. Under the law the commission must consider the intrinsic value of the stock to any purchaser. Since the transit company did not care to offer evidence as to the actual value of the bus concern, disapproval of its offer became a matter of course.

A final merger of street cars and bus lines seems particularly desirable at this time, so that rerouting may be completed on the basis of a unified system. There are indications, however, that the proposition submitted by the Capital Transit Co. would not operate in the public interest. The very fact that the offer was based on a special valuation of the bus company's stock, rather than upon its probable market value, suggests the possibility of an understanding between the interests concerned. The rights of minority stockholders as well as those of the public must be protected. The Public Utilities Commission will undoubtedly insist upon such safeguards before any merger plan is approved. Consequently, unification of the District's transport system seems to be contingent upon submission of a new merger plan.

The present offer has aroused considerable antagonism among citizens' associations and other groups. It is rather strange that a company depending upon the good will of the people for revenue should persist in carrying to the courts a proposition so decidedly unpopular, aside from its questionable soundness. The Capital Transit Co. has an opportunity to render a community service, which appears to be in line with good business principles, by negotiating for purchase of the bus company at a figure representing its actual current value.

He's No Hypocrite!

There is something admirable about the man who has the courage of his convictions. Just as hypocrisy is always distasteful, so candid adherence to any sincere belief commands respect. For this simple reason it is not Postmaster General Farley who will lose by his blunt indorsement of the spoils system.

Three years ago—before he became a prominent barnacle on the New Deal—Mr. Farley expressed the belief that when the Democrats win an election, jobs should be distributed among loyal party followers. Without the slightest embarrassment, he now reaffirms that position. No one expected him to do otherwise. At heart Mr. Farley is first and last a politician of the Tammany school. He makes no bones about it. And certainly nobody could truthfully accuse him of being what he effectively disclaims himself—"a hypocrite in public life."

The criticism which Mr. Farley has brought down upon the Administration has nothing to do with his honesty, integrity or his ability to garner votes. It concerns only the complete inconsistency of his political philosophy with the much-trumpeted idealism of the New Deal. The greater the triumph of machine politics, the less effective all this oratory about National economic planning. The more sincere Mr. Farley, the less convincing the advertised devotion of the Administration to efficient, nonpartisan, scientific Government.

There, and there only, is the rub for our genial Postmaster General.

An Entering Wedge.

Wire tapping is essentially a repugnant practice. The American public was loud in its condemnation of this method of gathering evidence when its widespread use was revealed during prohibition. Despite the fact that the Supreme Court, by a majority of one, has upheld its legality, the procedure has been widely condemned, and Congress has refused appropriations for this purpose. So Secretary Morgenthau was ill-advised when he said, in referring to dope peddlers, smugglers and bootleggers, that "You can't get these people if you go about it in a sissy manner."

None condones the smuggling of dope, obviously one of the most vicious ways of making money that human beings indulge in. And it is easy enough to feel that the whole narcotics traffic is such a dastardly business that any means of combating it is acceptable. But in feeling this one loses sight of a high principle, which is that the state should never descend to the practices of criminals in its effort to stamp them out.

The use of wire tapping is dangerous even if, as Mr. Morgenthau suggests, it be confined to certain classes of criminals. Detectives who once resort to this method will not willingly forego it when they come up against difficult cases of a very different nature. The practice may be legal, but it is wholly unethical, and in the minds of most people one which should be discouraged. There are already too many indications of a trend toward arrogation of unlimited power by the state.

A Local Recreation Pier.

The old Aqueduct Bridge has remained somewhat of a challenge to the planners of Washington ever since it was replaced as an artery of travel by the Key Bridge. For several years its rusted framework and rotting timbers served only to mar an otherwise unusually attractive view of the Potomac. Recently the CWA undertook to remove the decayed superstructure and reduce the height of the old stone piers to four feet above the water. But this work remains unfinished, and the partially dilapidated piers are still an eyesore.

Numerous attempts were made to save the old bridge, or at least its solid and well-preserved piers. Such efforts have failed because there is no need for another span across the Potomac in this vicinity. It appears, however, that some of the old piers might be put to beneficial use. The Post suggests that the site would be ideal for a recreation pier extending to or over the water from the north bank.

Washington has by no means exhausted the advantages of the Potomac as a popular playground, particularly during the sweltering summer months. One reason for this is found in the pollution of the stream. With the construction of an elaborate sewage-disposal plant, however, that condition will happily be corrected. Henceforth, the river should become increasingly a part of the Capital's playground facilities. Construction of a recreation pier on the foundation of the old Aqueduct Bridge would be an important step in that direction.

Families with automobiles now have access to some of the beautiful vistas which the Potomac affords. But those without cars derive little value from the drive around Hains Point and the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway. At relatively small cost the Potomac breezes, and the view over the beautiful reaches of the river above and below Georgetown, could be made available to families living in a congested area, where present recreational facilities are certainly not excessive. The property required for such an improvement already belongs to the Government. Since the bridge abutments have not yet been demolished, a small outlay would give Washington an amusement center of a type not now available in any part of the city.

New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and other large cities operate recreation piers which pay big dividends in health and social values. Unlike some of the expenditure to improve the National Capital, this would be a project particularly calculated to benefit under-privileged Washingtonians rather than visitors. We suggest that the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, and the District Commissioners, give serious attention to the possibilities of a Georgetown recreation pier before any further steps are taken toward demolition of the old Aqueduct Bridge abutments.

Playing With Fire.

Last Sunday thousands of German Lutheran congregations listened to denunciations of Reichsbishop Mueller and his civil aid. They are held responsible for the "triumph of violence and hypocrisy," denounced as instrumentalities of Satan, and excoriated with more restraint but no less force in a manifesto of the Bavarian Church. The manifesto is especially significant, because it is signed by the State bishop and the council of the Bavarian Lutheran Church.

After describing the methods employed in deposing the bishop and council, following forcible entry into the church offices, it is declared that this offensive of the civil administrator can only be compared with warlike action. "All protests against the arbitrary rule and the unspiritual regime of the Reich Church government have now formed their devastating confirmation. The faith of the churches has been destroyed and the doors have been opened for every heresy that unites with these powers." In conclusion, pastors and congregations are urged to refuse obedience to a church government which is contrary to the faith and the constitution.

The dissident forces that are always obscurely at work to undermine the power of a dictatorship may break out in many different and unexpected ways. But none is more dangerous, or more difficult to suppress, than those outbreaks which result from assaults upon the religious beliefs and the religious institutions of a people.

The emotional temperament and the strong religious feelings of the people of southern Germany are as well known as their inherited antagonism to nationalistic policies that tend to suppress local institutions. A dictator who fails to gauge the strength of these sentiments is either very ignorant or extraordinarily rash. Already, according to reports, the demonstrations against Hitler's lieutenants are tending to lead to open denunciation of the Fuehrer himself.

Whatever the policy adopted in dealing with this situation, the Nazi Government will find itself confronting a difficult problem. Either ruthless suppression of the demonstrators or capitulation in face of their protests will seriously weaken the position of the Nazi Government and diminish its prestige in the eyes of the people.

Routine Performance.

Firemen seldom encounter explosives in a burning building, as they did in a construction shack near Rock Creek Bridge Monday night. But every time they respond to a fire alarm they face unknown dangers. Whether combustibles menace an entire neighborhood, or a rubbish fire merely blazes too high, these men are on the job. The extremes are part of the routine.

The important thing is not that a group of firemen rushed up to a shack containing explosives and sprayed its interior with water to avert a catastrophe. That was their duty. Firemen are hired to protect the public from such contingencies. The significant aspect of Monday night's performance is the routine manner in which these men went into action. Spurts of heroism can never accomplish the results obtained through such orderly, undramatic and persistent devotion to duty.

The Sloan Plan.

The exact meaning of section 7(a) of the National Industrial Recovery Act has never been clear either in the minds of employes or employers. Though simple in wording, it has been the underlying cause of many bitter labor disputes in recent months. Most of the obscurity, however, has been read into the famous clause by those on both sides who object to making the concessions implied by its literal interpretation.

Thus the definition of collective bargaining set forth by Alfred P. Sloan, jr., in behalf of the General Motors Corporation, is noteworthy as an important step toward clarification of the issues involved. It follows closely on the decision of the A. F. of L. to encourage unionism among automobile workers on an industrial rather than a craft basis, which offers opportunity for quiet elimination of certain reasonable objections to trade unionism. And it is based on the enlightened principle that collective bargaining is a right of labor which is here to stay and which is far from being inimical to the best interests of industry.

"Collective bargaining," says Mr. Sloan's pamphlet, distributed to some 130,000 employes of General Motors, "is to be understood as a method of intercommunication and negotiation between employes and management whose objective is the maintenance of harmonious and cooperative relations through mutual understanding and agreement with respect to terms and conditions of employment." This statement is amplified by the declaration that "employes must be given entire freedom with respect to the selection and form and rules of their organization and their selection of representatives."

On the other hand, Mr. Sloan is equally explicit as to the limitations of collective bargaining. "It does not mean collective employe-employer management." Nor does it imply assumption by employes of a voice in matters "which the management by its very nature must ultimately decide upon its own responsibility."

To a large extent section 7(a) has proved disappointing because some employers have refused to accept the constructive thought in Mr. Sloan's pamphlet which we quote first, and because some labor leaders have refused to accept the equally convincing argument outlined next. The president of General Motors has done a National service by indicating so clearly that the trouble is not with the law, but by attempt to distort the law to obtain from it a partisan advantage.

Jazz, Tennis And Elberta.

It took a Princeton professor three years of research to track down the origin of the word jazz. Protracted correspondence was necessary before the Princetonian felt certain this typically twentieth century term had come over from West Africa in the slave ships of colonial days. Later on, in the creole patois, it became a synonym for "hurry up," and was naturally seized upon as a fit term for the music and the era of the lost generation.

Dr. Harold H. Bender tells this in the current issue of the Princeton Alumni Weekly. With eleven associates he has rewritten the etymology of some 500,000 words for the new edition of a famous dictionary, which is supposed to contain more words than any dictionary in any language.

Even more interesting, perhaps, is the story of tennis. According to the Princetonians it does not come from the French verb "tenir," as had been supposed. Dr. Philip K. Hitti found it in the vocabulary of Nordic crusaders returning from the Holy Wars in the East. Tinnis, he discovered, was a town in lower Egypt, a sort of Fall River of the time, noted for its cloth. This was used, among other things, for making the medieval predecessor of the tennis ball. Dr. Hitti must have felt pretty superior, knowing that and keeping it to himself until the dictionary was published.

But the cream of the lot is supplied by Dr. Bender, who had no end of trouble learning the origin of the word "elberta." His explanation shows that nothing will balk an etymologist when he is on the trail. After a wearying amount of futile scratching he finally proved elberta to be the middle name of the wife of the man who first grew the variety of peaches to which it is now universally applied!

A young woman announces that she will make a round-trip swim of the English Channel. That won't get her anywhere.

GEN. BURGOYNE, 137 years ago today, surrendered to Gen. Gates, of the American forces, in the darkest period of our history. Washington allowed Burgoyne to return to England where, denied audience of the King and refused a court-martial, he went over to the opposition party and resigned his appointments, but upon a change of ministry at the close of the American war, he was appointed commander in chief of Ireland, and upon his death he was buried in Westminster Abbey.

Hours and Wages.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The American Federation of Labor, under leadership of President Green, has launched a determined drive for a five-day week and a six-hour-day as a sure means of relieving the depression. Shortening of the hours of labor, which has been one of the chief accomplishments of organized labor, has hitherto been defended on the ground of relieving the overburdened workingman from the excessive strain of toil, affording more time for recreation and leisure. But now, for the first time, it is urged as a means of balancing the industrial equation.

A few years ago the fantastic doctrine of technocracy flourished and faded like a six-weeks' wonder. It was quickly laughed off the stage and died of ridicule. But, like aviation, though at first it became the buffeted victim of ridicule, yet its underlying logic was sound and its suggestion of far-reaching significance.

According to the doctrine of technocracy, through the perfection of machinery and efficiency of management, all necessary commodities can be produced by exacting of each individual a few hours of labor each day. The whole question reduces itself to a simple mathematical equation. Our power of production outstrips our capacity for consumption.

We can easily overstock the market with every conceivable line of commodity. The farmer produces more wheat than we can eat or sell. The mills turn out more fabric than we can wear or exchange abroad. The manufacturers can soon make more automobiles than our streets will hold. All of this can be accomplished by employing four-fifths of our available labor supply, leaving ten million of able and willing workmen in idleness and unemployment.

To shorten the work week in some such way as the American Federation of Labor suggests would just about absorb the army of the idle. No other plan which is so simple and feasible has yet been forthcoming. But if the product must needs remain the same, we can not increase one factor without reducing the other. The American Federation of Labor violates the integrity of its own logic when it demands shortening of hours and inclusion of 10,000,000 more workmen at the same scale of wages.

Capitalists now claim that they are producing at as narrow a margin of profit as is consistent with profitable investment. To increase prices and at the same time to retain or raise the level of wages to offset the rise is like adding an equal weight to both sides of the scale in order to preserve the balance. It will require mutual sacrifice on the part of both capital and labor for the general welfare of the whole. Both must agree to accept as low a margin of profit, on the one side, and as low a scale of wages, on the other, as will enable them to carry on.

On the Side of Law.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The papers report that President Roosevelt is more and more winning over the conservative element in the country, and that the manifold Republican committees facing a new campaign are finding it far from easy not only to acquire the necessary funds for the campaign, but also for the indebtedness hanging over from 1932.

It is exceedingly intelligent on the part of the conservative forces to rally to the President. As a profound believer in the intelligence, the sanity and the conservatism of the American people, I am confident that they have chosen on the side of law, order and a progressive liberalism, and that the leadership of President Roosevelt is established in this country for as long a time as he can be prevailed upon to keep it, or is spared to retain it.

Big League Politics.

President Roosevelt, of the Majority League, is still at the head of the Demi-crated team. Some observers think that he is grooving the balls down the capitalistic alley, while other opponents charge him with cardinal colora and errors. He seems to have a change of pace to fit the differing conditions. As a batter he hits both left and right. Some of the support for his pitching has been rotten. Jim Farley, as manager and catcher, gets them going and coming. Al Smith, who went into an outlaw Liberty League and now shows some signs of returning to the fold, formerly had a fast ball, but has slowed down markedly.

General Utility Man Johnson, comedian and bat boy for the front office, has been let out by the waiver route. He had a run-in with one of the chief umpires, and his curves went wild. The little birds say that he will undertake a barnstorming trip, and continue his roaring and other antics. Coach Tugwell has been sent on a scouting expedition to Europe until after November 6. Rumor has it that he was too dangerous in the pinches.

The Republi-canned team, dizzied into submission in 1932, is trying for a comeback. Herbert Hoover, record holder for errors and for the foul play on the bonus marchers, has been banished to the "out" field. He has recently been Sat-eve-posted into mild publicity by his criticisms of the opposing team. Fletcher, the new manager, spends his time in protesting the decisions of the umpires. Gifford Pinchot, after years of progressive outlawry, is pinch-hitting for his erstwhile foes.

Not-so-young Teddy, who "mavericked" himself into notoriety a few years ago by trying to put Cousin Frank in his right place in the Roosevelt family, and who also carried a famous black bag, gets struck out when he comes to bat.

Why not give a real team, the Socialists, an opportunity?

Better Arguments Needed.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Undoubtedly the "Tammany Halls" which have been running the State of Maryland and Montgomery County deserve ousting; but the opposition must put up better arguments to show cause for success. A change may be desirable, but not at cost of retrogression.

The rapacity of the State gang is immeasurable, and the county gang is equally as bad. However, it can be said that major crime is much less under these joint administrations than in most other similar industrial and residential areas. The gang bosses apparently have passed the word to get the "gravy" by taking everything not nailed down; but with the understanding that any real rough stuff would result in the slovenly henchman being thrown to the wolves. This last has been done on occasion.

The average working man has not the slightest chance of getting a better living in this State and county than in any other boss-ridden community, but his personal safety is greater when he can get any living at all. If the opposition expects to win, it must give the average man more hope of improving his personal finances.

Airships In War.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Hoping to remove the doubt as to "whether airships would be of much use to us in time of war," as expressed in the letter of Rudolph Rayford published in The Post on October 11, I submit the following facts of record:

Transport ships, convoyed by airships, were never molested by submarines. Every submarine commander stood in deadly fear of airships because of the latter's ability easily to locate, and by posing over them direct bombing accurately with disastrous effect.

The dirigible airship is also an admittedly efficient defense against airplane carriers.

Finally, the establishment of operating bases for airplane attack upon the United States, if we possessed a fleet of modern American designed dirigible airships, normally employed in peace-time pursuits, yet capable of conversion over-night into defensive weapons in the event of emergency, would be impossible.

A second statement in the letter under discussion, that "they (airships) are slow, clumsy and expensive," is conceded to be correct so far as it relates to, as it evidently does, the recognized obsolete Zeppelin-type airship.

However, it is evident that Gen. Mitchell did not have in mind the present type when he suggests "that we build airships for protection."

One For Mosby.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I note in a letter by Andrew E. Mosby, in today's Post, the fact that during the war with Mexico, we acquired "California and the great Southwest."

Has anyone yet justified that farcical war with Mexico? I think that war will always be an acknowledged farce—rotten politics from beginning to end; just one instance of America's ability to "acquire by brute force." And I love my America, too, even though I can so clearly see some of our pathetic faults.

As Others See It

Is Shaw a Mere Mortal?

When Bernard Shaw passes up an opportunity to deliver a lecture, that's news. Such an unusual event is reported from London, in the announcement that, for the first time in 20 years, Shaw will not give his annual address on current affairs before the Fabian Society. More surprising than this, however, is the reason given for the curb on his eloquence. "Even Mr. Shaw is not immortal," says an officer of the Fabians, adding that it was feared the strain of the address might be too great for him. What a blow this statement is to the claims of vegetarianism, to the prowess and physique of G. B. S., to those of us who thought that Shaw, like Tennyson's brook, would simply "go on forever."

There are some shots still left in the Shavian quiver, however. In the interview with the London Sunday Chronicle, reprinted in part in last Sunday's Post-Dispatch, his wit and invective are much as of old. He rails against countries that are not ruled by dictators as "merely sticking in the mud;" he assails Britain's "parliamentary tosh;" he urges putting down the minority and letting the majority party have its way without restraint.

Those vigorous pronouncements are obviously not the dying gasps of a decayed publicist. For Mr. Shaw is, of course, immortal. He is now merely entering his second incarnation, and a far cry it is from his earlier libertarian personality. And that, perhaps, explains why he isn't addressing the Fabian Socialists any more.

Jungle Peace

Postoffice, Wednesday.

"THEY must," said one of the luncheon-party, "have had a regular parrot-and-monkey time."

"Are parrots and monkeys natural enemies?" asked another member of the party. "What is a parrot-and-monkey time, anyhow?"

H. J. Anslinger was the host: H. J. Anslinger, Commissioner in command of the U. S. Treasury's Bureau of Narcotics. He said:

"I once had a parrot-and-monkey time."

"Chasing opium-smugglers?" asked the first guest.

* * *

He has done such admirable work in building and maintaining the Narcotics Bureau that some of his admirers forget his equally admirable consular record. Nevertheless, it exists—at no great distance behind him.

* * *

And there the future Commissioner demonstrated that a parrot and a monkey can't keep the peace.

* * *

La Guaira is a beautiful town. It lies at the foot of a sheer and tropical mountain and along a crescent-shaped beach. There are palms and mangoes, bananas and guavas. But the little port is not enlivening. Although the trade-winds are said to temper its climate, the mean temperature is 81. The population, in the Anslinger Age, rested well beneath 6,000.

* * *

So the American Consul was pleased when somebody gave him a monkey—more pleased when somebody else sent him a parrot.

* * *

The monkey was a Venezuelan monkey, rather good sized. The red Venezuelan parrot was rather good sized, too. Both were young, and their new owner decided he could train them to be friendly.

He introduced them, and they fought. He admonished them—told them that good manners were the true tokens of good breeding—that strife in a U. S. Consulate was unheard of. But they fought.

He punished them impartially—next day brought them together again. The monkey nodded, chattered, made a side-swipe at the parrot. The parrot said "Oh yeah" in Spanish and executed a flank-movement with his beak.

The boss tried for three weeks. Peace never lasted for as many minutes.

* * *

Finally, the boss tried imprisonment. The patio contained two suitable inclosures. Into one, he chained the monkey. The parrot, whose wings had been clipped enough to prevent flight, he placed in the nearby smooth-walled inclosure, which the bird couldn't climb.

The parrot looked all around to see if she was observed. Convinced that she wasn't, she waited till a light breeze swept, across her prison-yard, the bending branches of a neighboring bush. She seized this, ran up it, ran along another till her own weight bent it right over the wall of the monkey's concentration-camp—and then she renewed hostilities.

* * *

That evening the Consul chained both creatures, the monkey to a convenient boy. At 4 a. m. the monkey woke his "master" by beating the box against the house-wall—wouldn't stop until released—and, as soon as released, attacked the parrot.

Next night, the Consul slept with an open window, and with a rope in one hand. The other end of the rope he attached to the box, which he hauled in when the monkey began to beat it, whereafter sleep became again possible. But this wasn't the case on the third morning, for then, when the Consul hauled, the box wouldn't budge. He had to get up and go out for it: the monkey was holding it tight.

* * *

"So then," the Consul confessed, "I surrendered. I said:

"'All right—all right! Have it your own low way. If I can't appeal successfully to your finer feelings, if you have no sense of decorum and if I can't coerce you—why, coerce each other.'

"And they did.

* * *

"There was a fountain in the center of the patio with a wall around it. The monkey would lie down on that and pretend to sleep. The parrot wouldn't be fooled until temptation became too irresistible. But then she would tiptoe up from the rear—oh, taking several seconds to a step! And when she judged she was near enough, she'd make a leap. At that same instant, the monkey—without turning his head to aim—would thrash out with his tail.

"If the parrot got to his objective first, he'd have the tail in his beak—and the monkey set up a terrific howl. If the monkey's counter-offensive was properly timed, his tail swept the parrot into the tank around the fountain—and what the parrot yelled about that wouldn't be fit for publication."

* * *

"But which of them," chorused the Commissioner's guests, "finally killed the other?"

"I see," replied the Commissioner, "that you still don't understand the full meaning of the phrase 'a parrot-and-monkey time.' Of course the monkey didn't kill the parrot, and of course the parrot didn't kill the monkey. Each of them knew that, if he killed the other, he wouldn't have a companion left to fight with.

"And to a parrot or a monkey," asked the Commissioner, "what is life worth unless it contains a chronic enemy?"

The Principle of the Thing.

THE indignation of the newspapermen who took Secretary Morgenthau's announcement that he would permit wire-tapping in the search for bootlegging and narcotic violations is not likely to spread. It will not, in fact, go beyond the first day's story and an editorial or two. A second story on the subject would hit page 5.

BARGERON

This is not to deny that a few years ago such an announcement would have been news. It would have been a controversy of the first order. But now we've got our liquor back. It's different.

It is not difficult at all to recall the distended temples and hair-raising that an announcement of this sort by a previous Administration caused in Congress a few years ago. It became an issue.

* * * * *

Regardless of the fact that prohibition was the law of the land, we wets wanted to know if the Administration was going to undermine our whole structure, our morals, our manhood, with a dastardly espionage system. It was not a case of getting one's whisky. As a matter of fact, we were not interested in the whisky at all. It was the principle of the thing we were concerned in.

The vote, in the eyes of the wets, was a showdown between the thinking Congressmen and the fanatics. Those who held to the view that wire-tapping was a necessary way to catch law violators were simply Judas Iscariots, that's all. It was not the matter of getting a drink. It was the principle of the thing.

Why, a lot of us wets never took a drink in those days, or if we did, we just did so because of the principle of the thing.

* * * * *

So much wet agitation was developed that a lot of dry Congressmen were beginning to feel uncomfortable and decided on this vote that although they would remain dry they would cultivate the wets by voting with them on the principle of the thing. The principle of the thing came to prevail, too, not on the first vote, but on another one.

If I am not mistaken so many Congressmen had come to see the principle of the thing when the last prohibition enforcement appropriation was made that a provision was inserted saying that none of it could be used in wire-tapping, or even in the purchase of evidence.

* * * * *

But, of course, it is different now. Bootleggers are law violators. It seems that they didn't used to be. After all, the Government has got to prosecute law violators, hasn't it? The principle of the thing? The answer to that is that it takes drastic measures to catch a thief.

And we can have confidence in the secretary to apply this rule sanely. He knows his people. He doesn't intend to use wire-tapping against income tax evaders. That proves that the better element of us have nothing to fear.

Now, if he should be so foolhardy as to apply wire-tapping methods to the running down of income tax evaders there would be one long, uproarious squawk. We don't mind subordinating our principles when the commonweal is at stake, but he had better not make the mistake of asking us to subordinate them too much.

Insofar as subordinating them in the interest of the elimination of bootleggers and narcotic violators it is all right. Because we don't use narcotics and we've got our liquor back.

But he had better lay off of us income tax evaders. We are just for good clean fun—and sticklers for the principle of the thing.

Benevolent Work To Be Discussed

'Little Things' Feed Rancor in Balkans

By Hanna Fried.
(Special Correspondent of The Post.)

LAST week an assassin's bullet took the life of Yugoslavia's King—and, while the world watched anxiously, the torch of war flared again for a while in the Balkans. Riots took place, troops were moved to borders, blame was shifted to a hundred shoulders. Half the countries of Europe were immediately on the alert, each ready to move at the first sign of hostilities.

If war ever comes to the Balkans, however, it will not be the murder of a king or the sudden overthrow of a government that will bring it on. It will follow naturally on the trail of the World War and the unsatisfactory peace treaties which came after it. It will be the result of a thousand pettinesses, of rancor and bitterness that, after 16 years, will not die.

But above all, if there is to be a war, it is the "little things" piling up which will make it. Little things, irritating the quick-tempered eastern European, restricting his liberty, affecting his pride, making him every day more nationalistic, will set thousands of feet marching.

Take Hungary, for example. Reduced by the Treaty of Trianon to less than half her former size, her population cut 59 per cent, she is still the center of the Balkan ring, still important in the European scheme of things. And today it is the watchfulness of her neighbors—Yugoslavia, Rumania and Czechoslovakia—that is getting on her people's nerves.

The average Hungarian, for instance, can not understand why he is deprived of his native newspapers when he reaches the border. The official word "propaganda" means nothing to him. The fact that Rumania has 1,500,000 dissatisfied, restless Magyars inside its boundaries; that Czechoslovakia has 1,000,000 and Yugoslavia 500,000, and that these "strangers within the gates" must be closely watched, holds no significance for him. He sees no occasion for censorship, no need for governmental nervousness. He wants his newspaper—and he resents having it taken away from him.

Czechoslovakia Gets Biggest Share of Hate.

Although the Hungarians naturally dislike all the nations which were enlarged at Hungary's expense after the war, it is Czechoslovakia that today receives the largest share of Magyar hate. Closest to Budapest, its border Hungary's longest, Czechoslovakia's regulations rankle most.

Not only does she take the Hungarian citizen's newspapers from him, but she frowns on his singing his native songs—forbids, in fact, one of the most popular military songs, the "32es Baka."

This infuriates the proud Magyar and he does not hesitate to say so. When he gets a chance, he hits back, defiantly. Going by boat down the Danube, where Czech and Hungarian towns face each other along the shore, the writer noticed that great care is taken to play true Magyar pieces twice as loudly as usual through an amplifier whenever a stop is made at a Czech landing place. Such is retaliation!

Fruits and flowers are confiscated at the border between Hungary and Czechoslovakia, undoubtedly for ordinary agricultural reasons. The Czechs, like the Americans, wish to avoid the importation of certain insects and plant pests. Yet, of course, this annoys the Hungarians. Many families were separated by the realignment after the war—in the town of Esztergon half the bridge over the river is Czech, the other half Hungarian, and one needs a visa to go across—and visiting is frequent. "Just a few peaches," or a tiny bouquet of carnations, is all the Hungarians want to take through. Naturally, they grow furious when Czech officers roughly relieve them of their gifts.

"Why," one indignant Hungarian woman declared, "I saw them let in an American girl with a box full of fruit—and flowers besides! But, then, America made them what they are today. We poor Hungarians have our last little grape taken from us."

And the Czech officers are not too gentle. Feeling between the two races has never been particularly cordial and time has not mended matters.

Time Has Aggravated Natural Antagonisms.

Time, in fact, has served only to aggravate natural antagonisms. As Hungary's political leaders lean more and more toward Germany, Czechoslovakia and Rumania view the Magyar nation with suspicion. Hungary concludes a trade pact with Italy—and Jugoslavia eyes her dubiously. All three unite in heartily disliking Hungary's militant irridentism, and with reason.

"Nem, nem, soha!"—"No, no, never!"—so Hungary stoutly declares. Never will the Hungarian people reconcile themselves absolutely to the thought that their country is to remain forever as small and poor as she has been since the war. Some day, goes the thought behind the words, their Hungary once more will be restored to power and glory. The words, flaunting defiance, shout out from a thousand walls; etched in carefully planted flowers, they stare up from a hundred green garden beds; uttered in proud ringing tones, they tumble from the lips of a million school children.

Her neighbors may laugh at Hungary's naivete, may ridicule her people's eternal hopefulness, but the three words stand as a spiritual bar between them. They make up one of a dozen "little things" that prevent real understanding among the Balkan nations.

Then, in every street car in Budapest, one finds the Hungarian national prayer. A resounding credo, it aptly expresses the Hungarian philosophy of today:

I believe in a God,
I believe in a homeland,
I believe in a divine, eternal justice,
I believe in the resurrection of Hungary. Amen.

There is not a person in Hungary who does not know that prayer. From earliest childhood days it is drilled into every citizen, until it becomes as much a part of him as his own name. And when he goes to Budapest, he visits the remarkable Independence Square, to see with his own eyes the familiar words set out in brilliant flowers on a great circular bed.

This Independence Square is typical of Hungarian feeling. In a lovely setting of old houses, bordered by a green, tree-lined walk, four dramatic statues stand. Each is symbolic of some of the lost territory of Hungary. The defeated nation is pictured unwillingly succumbing to Czechoslovakia on the North, Rumania on the East, Yugoslavia on the South and Austria on the West. The inspired sculptor may allow the body that represents Hungary to droop in the arms of the conquerors, but he gives the face an expression of hope and pride that can not be beaten. With these vivid reminders set down in the heart of her largest city, it is no wonder that Hungary does not forget.

Of such things—mottos and statues, rules and regulations, wounded pride and resurgent nationalism—was war ever made and of such things is it made today. Whether the "little things" will lead to actual conflict between Hungary and any of her neighbors is doubtful. That they add interest and danger to an already complicated situation is a fact no one can deny.

Plans Revealed For New Canal

Virginia Conference Told of Inland Waterway to Assist Ships.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 16 (AP).—Emphasizing the need for a proposed ship canal across the State of New Jersey, J. Hampton Moore, of Philadelphia, president of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association, this afternoon referred to "the ghastly wreck of the Morro Castle within a few miles of the northern entrance of the proposed new ship canal."

In his annual address at the twenty-seventh convention of the association, Mr. Moore said the goal of the organization—a safe, serviceable and continuous inland waterway from Florida to New England—is in sight. He referred to the proposed New Jersey channel, for a distance of 31 miles between Trenton and Raritan Bay, as "the missing link" in this development.

Mr. Moore's address and a letter from Maj. Gen. E. M. Markham, chief of engineers, U. S. A., were outstanding features of the Waterways Association's opening convention session this afternoon.

Gov. Peery of Virginia and Mayor J. Fulmer Bright of Richmond were among those who welcomed the delegates holding their convention here for the third time during the existence of the organization.

Gen. Markham's letter described the status of river and harbor and flood-control improvements undertaken by the Corps of Army Engineers under the public works program with particular reference to improvements on the Atlantic Coast.

King of Belgium Opens Second Section of Canal

Brussels, Oct. 16 (AP).—King Leopold, amidst great enthusiasm of a witnessing throng, today formally opened the second section of the King Albert Canal.

The canal, linking Liege and Antwerp without passing through Dutch territory as does the present waterway, was started in 1930. It will be completed by 1937 constituting the greatest achievement in public works in the history of Belgium.

Mrs. Roosevelt Invited to Judge Prettiest Babies

Leesburg, Va., Oct. 16 (Spl.).—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt has been invited to judge the prettiest babies in the show set for Saturday afternoon at the Leesburg school auditorium.

Judges of the healthiest babies in each class will be Miss Sue Leith and Miss Dougherty, Washington nurses, and Dr. Allen King, a Washington physician.

The show, which will be held under auspices of the Leesburg Parent-Teacher Association, will have eight or more classes for children up to 6 years of age. There will be a special class for twins. A silver cup will be awarded the champion-ship baby.

Higher Altitudes Rough on Germs

Disease Organisms Fail to Thrive There, Is Report.

Baltimore, Oct. 16 (AP).—Disease germs, it appears, do not thrive in high altitudes.

Dr. George Walker, Baltimore physician, in announcing results of tests made recently during an airplane flight up to 20,000 feet, said his tests showed that air currents above 11,000 feet are free of organisms which cause disease in the human body.

The test was made as part of a study to discover means of preventing epidemic spread of disease from city to city.

National Gallery

DR. FREDERIC CLEMSON HOWE, consumers' council, AAA. Known as the "grand old warrior of American reform," his life has been that of scholar, author and politician. Was among the first to contend that unless the public is given power, through higher wages, lower prices and moderate profits, to consume industry's output, there can be no recovery. Worked to protect the consumer by showing that industries were making a clean-up on raw materials. Spry, lean, full of zest at the age of 66, he has not yet grown tired or changed sides in the fight for social justice. Has lectured in many colleges and his books include studies of taxation, government, socialism and international cooperation. Member the Century and Cosmos Clubs and Phi Gamma Delta.

Such a large proportion of those who have been pictured by Mr. Robles have asked for the originals that The Washington Post is saving all these drawings to honor the requests of any future members of "The National Gallery."

H. I. Phillips' Once Over

Lines to a Boy King.

Lissen, Peter . . .
Beg pardon!
Your Majesty . . .
Yesterday you were a child,
A schoolboy at games
In peaceful Sandroyd . . .
There was the surpassing
Peace of rural England . . .
The song of birds . . .
The lowing of cattle and
The laughter of playmates . . .

* * * * *

You were romping through
Surrey's golden fields . . .
You could fish for trout
With a bent pin . . .
You could "shinny" up trees,
Scale stone walls . . .
Laugh and whistle.

* * * * *

King Peter II—
Yugoslavian monarch!
A king at eleven! . . .
A puzzled schoolboy on
The throne of a
Troubled kingdom!

* * * * *

Boyhood is behind you,
Peter . . . King Peter!
You are now a symbol . . .
A figurehead, an emblem
Of things you do not Understand . . . Of things
Your boyish heart hates.

* * * * *

Yesterday at Sandroyd . . .
Laughing boys and
Kindly tutors . . .
Peace and contentment;
Today, devious journeys
In darkened carriages . . .
Tearful silences . . .
A funeral cortege . . .
Grave faces and Ominous whisperings.

* * * * *

Good-by, Peter!
Welcome, your Majesty!
Farewell, childhood!
Hail to the King!

* * * * *

Sandroyd? It seems
Another world now,
Doesn't it, your Majesty?
You could laugh then . . .

* * * * *

Laugh now, Peter—
Don't let them take
Your childhood!
When spring comes again,
And the eyes of the world
Aren't focused on you,
Have some fun!

* * * * *

Shinny up a tree! . . .
Slide down the bannisters! . . .
Turn some cartwheels in
The throne room! . . .
Play and sing, Peter, and
Don't mind the regents!

* * * * *

Old Doctor Perovitch. . . .
Bust the Mayor of Zagreb's
Funny silk hat. . . .
Try a beanshooter on Prince Paul Karageorgevitch. . . .
And the next time
Nicola Uzunovitch leans
Over to kiss you, pull
His whiskers!

Luvvamike, Peter,
You've gotta have some relief
From this King business!

Well?

Town Asks Poll On Rum Issue

Local Option Vote Sought by Elkton, Va.; 107 Sign Petition.

Harrisonburg, Va., Oct. 16 (Spl.).—In spite of the overwhelming dry vote cast in the Rockingham County referendum, the town of Elkton, near the southern entrance of the Skyline drive, wants a local option election of its own.

The town has sufficient population, over 900, to vote itself out of the county referendum, if the voters see fit.

Judge H. W. Bertram, in Rockingham Circuit Court, yesterday received petitions bearing the signatures of 107 Elkton residents asking that an election be called. The judge will set the date for the election if it is determined the signatures represent at least 30 per cent of the qualified voters, as required by the ABC act.

Those sponsoring the petitions say they are concerned only with the sale of wine and beer of more than 3.2 alcoholic content. They say they do not expect the ABC board to establish a dispensary at Elkton. Since Rockingham voted dry only 3.2 beer has been sold at Elkton.

Rockingham County School Grant Raised

Reductions in 9 previously awarded loan and grant allotments for non-Federal projects and increases in 11 others were announced yesterday by Public Works Administrator Harold L. Ickes.

Among the allotments increased was the following in Virginia:

Rockingham County—Grant of $34,000 to the county school board for additions to six existing buildings and installing a heating plant in one building increased to $37,500 because bids received show that the work to be done will cost more than estimated at the time the original allotment was made.

Bequest Pays Church Debt.

Waynesboro, Pa., Oct. 16 (Spl.).—Through a bequest of $1,000 provided in the will of Jacob Galley, wealthy Mechanicsburg (Pa.) resident who died recently, the entire debt of the Dunkard Brethren Church here has been liquidated. The debt was incurred through erection of the new church.

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall.

CONFLICT is the essence of drama, but it doesn't have to be fisticuffs. The scale begins, say, with two women fighting each other silently with half-glances, and rises all the way to the big, round eternals—dynamic against static, era against era, good against evil. Today's books will show you the range of subtle opposition possible, which is none the less battling.

THEO. HALL.

Waldo Frank tells of almost every sort in the long, patient pages of "The Death and Birth of David Markand" (Scribner, $2.75). Under the great theme of flesh-and-blood labor supporting the peculiar deadness of buildings and factories, Mr. Frank's novel brings in a wealth of human relations to indict our times. Around Markand, the passionate labor leader; his wife, whom he understands with difficulty, and his friend, Byrne, who means so much to him, there stand scores of figures branded with the troublings of man when he has lost his foothold on the land. The arch-type is the highly vulnerable worker, caught up in the machine age, pushed in upon himself by the insulation of our modern conditions. And as fewer and fewer of us are not in this class, Mr. Frank's imposing work forms an epic sharply revelatory of today. We are distant from farm novels—we are not distant from this present conflict.

Yet so laudable an aim is marred, to my thinking, by Mr. Frank's pretty constant habit of allowing himself to make portentously grandiose conclusions. So much of it is a kind of oratory to the universe. With that ignored in our minds, we can come understandingly to his broad, rather bitterly hopeful canvas.

Of modern struggles between ideas, none is so dramatic as that portrayed in Russia—with the result that of the making of Soviet travelers' tales there is no end. Yet you are going to follow the narrative of Jacob H. Rubin's "I Live to Tell" (Bobbs-Merrill, $2.75) with ungrudged breathlessness, because he tells with simplicity and sincerity of personal adventures among the Soviets which can scarcely be matched for excitement.

Mr. Rubin was born a Russian Jew, later becoming an American business man and Socialist. In 1919-20 he returned to Russia. Taken up by the Whites in the Ukraine, he was first imprisoned, then freed when the Reds entered Odessa. Under their banner he became a power. He knew well the early Stalin, Emma Goldman, Alexander Bergman and the young Harvard idol of the Reds, John Reed. And he had a rare opportunity to view the inside workings of those first years. In 1931 he went back to Russia in disguise, and his verdict from that visit is not optimistic for the Soviet regime. Of it all, Mr. Rubin makes a book filled with action and personality, especially vivid because he is not trying to bolster a pre-existent literary reputation. But these pages should now gain him one.

If you crave real battles, look into V. M. Yeates' "Winged Victory" (Smith & Haas, $2.50), a narrative-novel of the British Royal Flying Corps on the Western Front. It catches the stomach-turning tenseness of airfights with the Archies (German planes) almost too vividly for comfort.

* * * * *

Struggle of a wholly different sort fills the pages of Preston Bradley's "Courage for Today" (Bobbs-Merrill, $1.50). The famous pastor of the Peoples Church in Chicago, radio speaker and, by the way, National president of the Isaak Walton League (fishermen), opens fire with a barrage of full bloodedly cheerful words upon present-day pessimism. He says:

"I have been hearing much whining and much cynicism and many explanations and much despair and much satire. If no one else does it, no matter what happens, I am going to proclaim that this age, if it is teaching me nothing else, is teaching me courage . . . the kind that is born out of struggling against the whole rottenness which civilization is in today!"

* * * * *

A mother fighting for her son is the theme of Olga Tchirikova's "Sandrik" (Dodd-Mead, $2). More spiritual and less dramatic than "Escape from the Soviets," it records a very similar situation. Mme. Tchirikova and her son, Sandrik, fled from Russia to Greece and then to the Riviera. Together they had to build up a world which had crashed around their ears. It is the homely and personal side of this defensive mother love which gives the book its very marked beauty.

Sandrik was the godson of Grand Duke Alexander, that jaunty and indomitable gentleman whose writings have entertained us all. And it was in Mme. Tchirikova's home on the Riviera that the grand duke died, leaving as his last authentic word the touching introduction to this book.

Few fighters remain so dear to American memories as Andrew Jackson. How they cheered mention of his name last night at the National, in the middle of the Messrs. Lewis' play, "Jayhawker!" While Marquis James is at work on the second volume of his definitive biography of "Old Hickroy," his wife, Besse Rowland James, has written a life of Jackson for young readers—"The Courageous Heart" (Bobbs-Merrill, $2). But children aren't the only ones who will relish this pulse-stirring tale of the man who said:

"I would rather die than retreat."

Off-hand, we might not think of "Don Quixote" as a fighting book. But behind the immortal story of the old knight of Spain and his faithful rascal, Sancho Panza, there lies the prime battle of the last thousand years—medievalism versus the modern temper.

If you've never read Cervantes' work, or if you want to go back to it again, you'll find few editions so available and satisfactory as this modern library "Giant" ($1)—936 clear-printed pages illustrated by 16 extravagantly amusing designs by Gustave Dore.

Drunkenness Gain Flayed by Cannon

Denies Dry Law Is Failure in Fredericksburg Talk.

Fredericksburg, Va., Oct. 16 (Spl.).—Denying the failure of prohibition, Bishop James Cannon, Methodist Church leader and militant dry crusader, said last night that the Nation suffers far more from the liquor traffic now than at any time during the prohibition era.

Bishop Cannon was the chief speaker at a temperance meeting at the Fredericksburg courthouse. Also speaking was the Rev. Edward J. Richardson, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League in Virginia.

Marked increases since repeal in drunken-driving arrests, fatalities arising from intoxication, arrests of intoxicated women, and other "deplorable signs" were cited by the bishop to support his claim for a return to State and National prohibition.

Mine Worker Falls 50 Feet and Lives

Virginian Hurt Critically in Drop Into Water.

Fredericksburg, Va., Oct. 16 (AP).—A 50-foot fall down the shaft of the old Franklin gold mine today caused critical injuries to Lawrence Showalter, 26-year-old Fauquier County mine worker.

Landing in 7 feet of water, which partially broke his fall, Showalter managed to cling to a rope and hold himself above the surface for half an hour until rescuers reached him. His arm and leg were fractured.

The breaking of a pulley spilled him from the bucket in which he was being lowered into the mine.

Gas Prices Sink To 14-Cent Low At Baltimore

Baltimore, Oct. 16 (Spl.).—Gasoline prices dipped to a new low here today, when most service stations offered their product at 14 cents a gallon. Independent dealers were reported to have opened with prices even lower.

This cut represents a decrease of 4.6 cents a gallon and a slash of 5.1 by those underselling the market since last Thursday.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

Newman's Idea of a Gentleman.

Some time ago I devoted two articles to the consideration of what distinguishes the gentleman from other men; and a correspondent now suggests that I give Cardinal Newman's "excellent and comprehensive definition of a gentleman." I am glad to do this, especially as it gives me an opportunity to recommend to all my readers an interesting and valuable book, containing immense riches of thought and style in very small space. This book was published in 1931 and is called "The Fine Gold of Newman" and is edited by the accomplished scholar in literature, Prof. Joseph J. Reilly, of Hunter College, New York City. This little book is a treasure house of the best specimens of the prose style of the great cardinal. In the essay called "Idea of a University" we find Newman's description of a gentleman, from which I print an extract, hoping it may induce some of my readers to look up the whole and read, especially what Newman says of the gentleman's attitude toward religion:

"It is almost a definition of the gentleman to say he is one who never inflicts pain. This description is both refined and, as far as it goes, accurate. The true gentleman in like manner carefully avoids whatever may cause a jar or a jolt in the minds of those with whom he is cast; all clashing of opinion, or collision of feeling, all restraint, or suspicion, or gloom, or resentment; his great concern being to make everyone at their ease and at home. He has his eyes on all his company; he is tender toward the bashful, gentle toward the distant and merciful toward the absurd; he can recollect to whom he is speaking; he guards against unseasonable allusions, or topics which may irritate; he is seldom prominent in conversation and never wearisome. He makes light of favors while he does them, and seems to be receiving when he is conferring. He never speaks of himself except when compelled, never defends himself by a mere retort; he has no ears for slander or gossip, is scrupulous in imputing motives to those who interfere with him, and interprets everything for the best. He is never mean or little in his disputes, never takes unfair advantage, never mistakes personalities or sharp sayings for arguments, or insinuates evil which he dare not say out.

"He has too much good sense to be affronted at insults, he is too well employed to remember injuries and too indolent to bear malice. He is patient, forbearing and resigned, on philosophical principles; he submits to pain, because it is inavitable; to bereavement, because it is irreparable, and to desire, because it is his destiny. If he engages in controversy of any kind, his disciplined intellect preserves him from the blundering discourtesy of better, perhaps, but less educated minds; who, like blunt weapons, tear and hack instead of cutting clean, who mistake the point in argument, waste their strength in trifles, misconceive their adversary, and leave the question more involved than they find it. He may be right or wrong in his opinion, but he is too clear-headed to be unjust; he is as simple as he is forcible and as brief as he is decisive."

Orphanage Bakes Potatoes.

Waynesboro, Pa., Oct. 16 (Spl.).—Eighteen acres planted in potatoes at the Quincy Orphanage farm near here yielded 5,434 bushels of cobblers, white rural and russets, an average of slightly over 301 bushels to the acre. The yield is regarded as fair considering the heat and dry weather in July and August.

Opened by Harris Hull.

Harris Hull, who presents The Post news broadcast—The Postilion—opened yesterday's afternoon session. As master of ceremonies, he introduced Miss Malvina Lindsay, woman's editor, and her staff, all of whom received warm applause from the audience. Miss Dorothea Duncan, home economics director of The Post, spoke briefly and introduced Miss Chambers.

Miss Chambers dealt largely with meat cookery, but included refrigerator cookies, biscuits, apple roll and many other items in a well-balanced diet in her demonstrations.

Sausages baked in bananas was one of the unusual tid-bits she prepared. "Banana bundles," each banana wrapped snugly in a roll of pastry before it was placed in the oven, was another delicacy the crowd approved with a round of applause.

Her innovations in meat cookery, Miss Chambers said, are based on scientific experiments made by the Department of Home Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Meat a Work of Art.

While any meat must be properly cooked, if it is to be tender and appetizing, it should have eye appeal also, and Miss Chambers proved what can be done to make a meat platter a work of art That same roast which came from the oven an even brown, gained in decorative effect when it was surrounded with rice mounds, each topped with half of a canned apricot, and garnished with sprigs of parsley.

Interest in every move Miss Chambers made was indicated by the number of questions sent up to her during the intermission. Some of these were answered by the speaker from the platform. Others will be turned over to Miss Duncan, who will give the information requested in her column in The Post next week.

During the intermission, the audience enjoyed a demonstration of meat cutting by Paul A. Goeser, who has similar exhibitions in every part of the country. And after watching that demonstration, the women in yesterday's audience will not buy just a roast or a steak or a pound of chops when they go to the butcher shop; they will know precisely which cuts to ask for, and whether they are getting exactly what they want.

Best Ground Meat.

The cheapest, toughest cuts make the best ground meat, Mr. Goeser told the audience. "A porterhouse steak, tender if it is broiled," he said, "makes less tasty meat balls than the cheaper cuts such as foreshank, brisket or bottom round." He showed how to cut a standing roast so that it serves for two meals, the roast itself to be used for one dinner, and the short-ribs to be braised for the next day's meal. Mr. Goeser will cut up a hind quarter of beef today; he will demonstrate pork cuts tomorrow and lamb cuts on Friday evening.

Miss Chambers also will change her program each day, so that persons attending all four days will receive a complete course in meat cookery, without duplication of recipes.

Foods, kitchen equipment and other household accessories are on display in the lobby of the auditorium. This includes many of the prizes which are being awarded, augmented by exhibits of cooperating merchants and manufacturers.

Cooking School Notes

Harris Hull Opens Session With "Good Afternoon, Ladies," But Men in Audience Fail to Take Offense; Even Miss Chambers Errs.

Not at all abashed by the "Good afternoon, ladies," which Harris Hull opened The Post cooking school in Washington auditorium yesterday afternoon, several men sat through the session and seem to enjoy it.

Said Vincent Sandel, "I don't see why a man should hesitate to admit that he likes to cook. I wouldn't want to cook all the time, but I do say there isn't a prettier sight anywhere than a nice cake rising the way you want it to."

Paul A. Goeser, who demonstrates meat cutting in the intermission, says a really clever hostess gives as much thought to the selection of the meat for her dinner party as she does to choosing the dess for the occasion. But Mr. Goeser is partial to meat. He has been in the business ever since he was graduated from the University of Iowa, Department of Animal Husbandry. Later he returned to teach there, and since he joined the National Live Stock and Meat Board, he has been giving demonstrations regularly from coast to coast.

The busiest young woman at the cooking school is Miss Dorothy Thompson, Miss Chambers' right bower. Besides assisting off-stage, she is responsible for many of the beautifully garnished dishes which are carried away as prizes.

The young man who conducted the awarding of gifts so efficiently, interpolating many a bright remark that delighted the audience between the calling of the numbers, is John Heiney, of The Post staff. Mr. Heiney is familiar to Washingtonians, for he broadcast The Postilion this fall while Harris Hull was on vacation.

The children at the cooking school were particularly well behaved at yesterday's session. Nancy Roberts, 3-year-old visitor from Chicago, sat on the floor at her grandmother's feet and played contentedly with a toy monkey throughout Miss Chambers' lecture. Two seats away, Baby Theron Minton lay in his mother's arms and consumed a meal that seemed to satisfy him heartily—his bottle of milk.

The best of cooks forget now and then. Miss Chambers had a lamb ring nicely packed in the dish in which it was to be baked, when she discovered she had left out the pepper and salt. Out it all went, into the mixing bowl again, to be properly seasoned.

Mrs. A. P. Seltzer, who has come from Chicago to make her home in Washington, was accompanied by her husband. Oh, no, my wife didn't make me come," Mr. Seltzer explained. "I like to hear about vitamins and things like that. And since we've been in Washington, we read your paper all the time, if you're interested in knowing that."

Neatly trimmed goatee, faun colored trousers, and pearl gray spats. We don't know who the gentleman was, but he was one of the most impressive members of the audience.

Mrs. S. Mauger, who spends her winters in Washington and her summers in Asbury Park, thinks if more brides came to Miss Chambers' lectures, there would be fewer divorces. "All young girls ought to go to cooking school and learn how to cook prperly," she said. "It's the best way to keep a husband."

Insull Baited 'Small Fellow,' Letter Shows

Chicago, Oct. 16 (AP).—Salesmen for Samuel Insull's last stock issue were ordered to seek small wage earners and merchants and urge them to invest their savings, according to evidence produced by prosecutors today in the Insull mail fraud case.

The prosecutor read a letter in which F. R. Evers, of Insull Utility Securities Co., said even "a sale a day" would do, and scolded salesmen for slowing down.

"Certainly there must be some clerk or stenographer, small merchant, or a janitor, who has pretty much of a fixed income and could easily save $10 a month," stated one of the letters, which added that such prospects would "like to accumulate money in this fashion."

"I would be very much satisfied," it continued, "if your men would sell one share a day on the savings plan. * * * The success of our business has lain in getting the small fellow to buy."

Big buyers were not as desirable, according to a second letter of Evers, introduced by Leslie E. Salter, Assistant U. S. Attorney General.

"My experience with the big buyers," it stated, "is that they sell out at the first turn of the market."

Other evidence of the Government's case—form many tons of business correspondence waiting in Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson's court room—told how Samuel Insull, sr., overruled accountants, who cautioned against one business method.

Arthur Young & Co., the accountants, gave an opinion in August, 1929, warning against showing "profits" they considered artificial.

Insull's letter on August 6, brief and imperious, stated:

"I do not think your firm should have made a ruling * * * without first discussing the matter with me; more especially as I do not agree at all."

I simply couldn't go through with all those kicking and bending exercises—they wore me out.

Then I tried to diet—but it didn't seem fair. I simply adore chocolate cake—and why should I have to give it up when all my slender friends eat it regularly and never seem to gain a pound?

Finally I learned about a simple corrective for abnormal obesity, known and prescribed by physicians the world over. —A corrective that would change the food I ate into energy instead of excess fat! And I learned that it was put up in convenient tablets containing exactly the right quantity—by one of the best-known medical laboratories in the United States.

And so I took Marmola—4 tablets a day—and quickly my excess fat began to disappear. What delighted me even more was the way I felt as a result of taking it—so mentally alert, so full of pep!

Now I'm down to normal—and never again will I let myself put on that deadening load of useless fat. Whenever I start to gain again, I take Marmola. It keeps my weight exactly right.

• • •

Thousands of women who have reduced the Marmola way might well tell you that story. Since 1907, more than 20,000,000 packages of Marmola have been purchased. Could you ask for any better recommendation than that?

Today—buy a package of Marmola, and start at once. You will soon experience Marmola's benefits. When you have gone far enough, stop taking Marmola. And you will bless the day you first discovered this marvelous reducing agent.

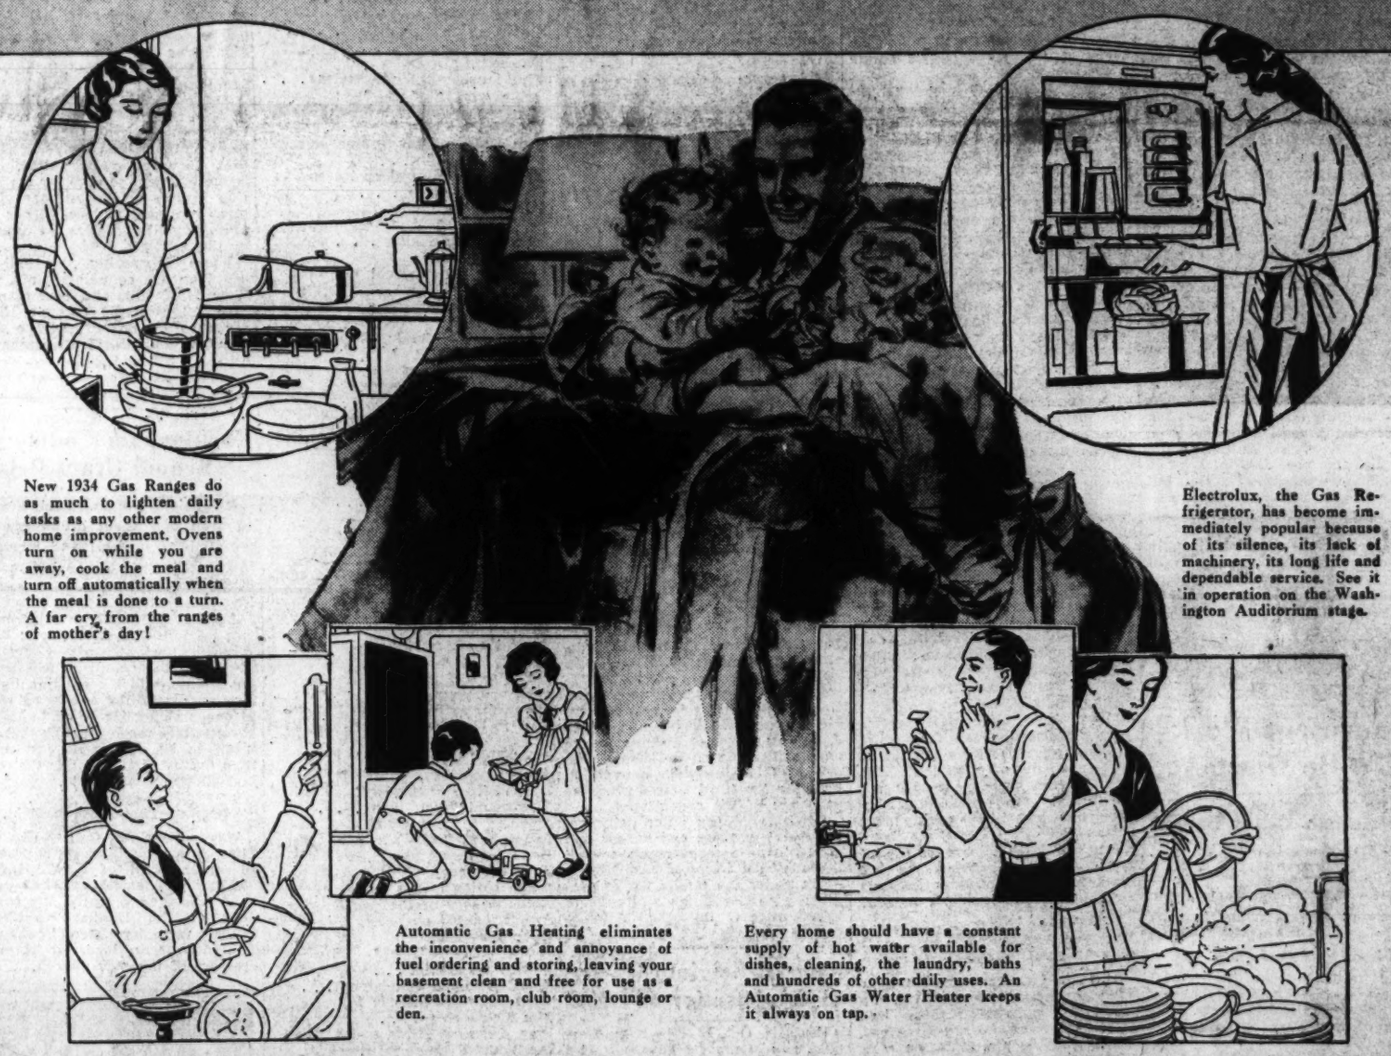
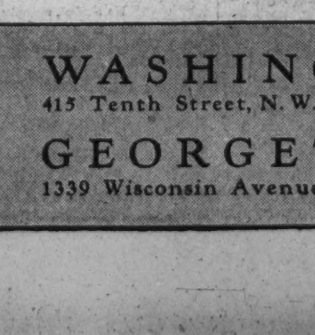
How to make your home life Easier, Healthier and Happier demonstrated by MODERN Gas APPLIANCES at the WASHINGTON POST COOKING SCHOOL

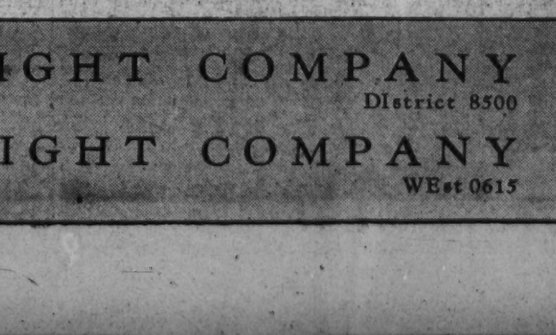


New 1934 Gas Ranges do as much to lighten daily tasks as any other modern home improvement. Ovens turn on while you are away, cook the meal and turn off automatically when the meal is done to a turn. A far cry from the ranges of mother's day!

Electrolux, the Gas Refrigerator, has become immediately popular because of its silence, its lack of machinery, its long life and dependable service. See it in operation on the Washington Auditorium stage.



Automatic Gas Heating eliminates the inconvenience and annoyance of fuel ordering and storing, leaving your basement clean and free for use as a recreation room, club room, lounge or den.



Every home should have a constant supply of hot water available for dishes, cleaning, the laundry, baths and hundreds of other daily uses. An Automatic Gas Water Heater keeps it always on tap.

Tousands of alert homemakers are attending The Washington Post Free Cooking School at the Washington Auditorium. They are learning new and interesting ways to prepare all kinds of tempting dishes on even the most modest budget. More than that, they are being shown how MODERN GAS APPLIANCES can effect economies in household management and at the same time allow more time for rest and recreation every day in the year. Plan now to attend the remaining sessions and note especially what interesting possibilities the appliances described in this advertisement could make IN YOUR OWN HOME.

"Cuccarracho," Latest Dance Hit, Is Being Featured at the Shoreham—Enters and Borgia Dancing at Heigh-Ho.

By Kay Ware.

More New York shows at Club Michel. Bob McCormick is master of ceremonies, as well as a dancer and singer. A beauty contest winner, Ruth Kid, also known as Miss New York, helps out in the entertainment, and best of all, the boop-a-doop girl, who is the sound effect in the cartoons, will roll her eyes and giggle in her high-pitched voice. She is an experienced actress as well as a sound effect. Her name is Bonnie Poe.

The new program starts Monday. Bobby Gillette and troupe are putting on their entertaining bits of song and dance tonight. You ought to hear Marion Field, formerly with N. B. C. and C. B. S. She sings anything from "Love in Bloom" to grand opera in five languages. Roberta Janey, with modernistic dances, finishes the present bill.

Chanticleer for convenience, directly under Club Michel. Organ music during cocktail hours. Stop in between 4:30 and 7:30 any day.

Brooke Johns has been chosen to revel with the goblins on Halloween. Plans are being made to lay a crown upon his brow, put a broomstick (figuratively) in his hand and name him "King of Revelry."

He's been just that for months out at his Barn. Sub-debs eye him with admiration and breathe, "Oh, isn't he wonderful" Show folk indulge in reminiscences, "Do you remember Brooke at——?"

The latest dance hit in the "Cuccarracho" which means in plain English, "Cockroach." Caperton and Columbus, at the Shoreham, pay terpsichorean tribute to Archie.

Seems that all dance fads start with "C." There's the Carioca, the Continental, and now "La Cuccarracho." What'll be next? Caterpillar, perhaps? Or Civet Cat?

Earl Carrol's Vanities have made a loan of Johnny Hale, with a series of popular songs. Adelaide and Sawyer, direct from European engagements present novelty and strut numbers. Syn Wynn, a girl, offers blues and personality songs, and Ginette Vallon waltzes with "controlled kicks," tangos and sings in native language.

Enters and Borgia, or more legally, Mr. and Mrs. Borgia, give Heigh-Ho patrons anything they want in the way of dancing. Their repertoire runs the gamut from musical comedy numbers to modern classical dances. "Flirtation" was written for them and introduced in "Manhattan Varieties.' Their "Caprice Viennoise" is a series of ancient Greek poses, welded together like a frieze. "Paso Doble" is essentially Spanish, with all the speed and flavor of Castille.

Then there's the "Merry Widow" waltz, graceful interpretation of the ballroom style. The tango is Parisian, slower and sleeker than the Spanish or Argentine variety.

There are lots more, because Enters and Borgia have 15 numbers.

By the way, Pete Macias has an instrument in his orchestra that you seldom see. It looks like a suitcase with metal levers screwed on the side. He hunted all over Havana for this South American specialty, and finally bought the very last one in town. It's tone is deep and softly booming. Hear it in the cariocas he plays.

If you want a preview of this season's debutantes, drop up to the Mayflower Lounge on an afternoon. If your week-end guests want a glimpse of Washington's diplomats, take them to the Mayflower. Or, if you want a good drink and soft, mellow music, both are served.

Speaking of lounges, Harrington's Pink Elephant is modernistic and cozy. There's just enough pinkness in the decoration to make it cheerful without being flashy. When you leave, your mood will have absorbed a little of the color, too.

To An Escort.

You bore me with your constant flow
Of witticisms, cracks and quips.
You think I like it? Heavens, no—
I can not find a Romeo
In animated comic strips.

Here's news for New York commuters. To open soon, Cafe de l'Opera, formerly the Henry Phipps estate on Madison avenue. Internationalism . . . chess and backgammon equipment . . . newspapers and magazines from all over the world . . . imported wines, and what not.

Current show at the Lotus: Elaine and Hilyer, dance team, with a modern waltz and a bolero. Rita Ray, solo tap dancer to tune of "Poet and Peasant" overture. Frances and Renard are held over from last week. Their contributions are fast rhythmic and acrobatic dances that take away your breath. Last, but by no means least, Lotus presents Senorita Enriqueta, a Spanish opera star who has done short-wave broadcasting.

Judy Ellington stopped the show one evening, when headliners from a local theater dropped in. Whereupon Bill Strickland becomes prouder than ever of his newest Capitolian.

When the management of a place goes all the way to Atlantic City to pick a crew of waitresses, you may be sure they were looking for service and a smile. That's what happened in the case of Casa Rita.

Jimmy Santmyer's orchestra furnishes music for luncheon, dinner and late supper. Libby Rowlands needs no introduction. You've heard her sing many times in many places.

Chats on chefs:

Linassier of the Willard has been in English-speaking countries for almost 20 years and knows very little of the language. Says he never had time to learn it . . . Harringer of Shoreham has made elaborate cakes and pastries for Gen. Pershing and Lindbergh, among others . . . Wardman's Manon is a humorous and incurable optimist with an infectious laugh. Went through the war and kept a diary of happenings.

Mayflower's Marchitelli speaks four languages and doesn't understand why Americans don't like sweetbreads . . . Maloni of the Hamilton likes to sit in the sun in a park. Great enthusiasm about small daughter. Calls her his peanut. Sometimes his peach.

Cotton Club believes that if one show is good, two are better. Patrons are undecided, because one is as good as the other, and both better than most. They manage to attract Washingtonians in large bunches all the time.

If you like bunches, merriment, fast music, and continuous movement, try Cotton Club. Shows include "Trial of Minnie the Moocher," with Drucilla Drew and Rastus Murray, and "Louisiana Nights," starring Vivian Baber and Johnny Vigal and a chorus of 18.

For the epicure:

Tally Ho, cozy nooks and fine menu . . . Iron Gate for atmosphere and luncheons . . . Try a small steak at the Raleigh . . . Rum buns at Olmsted Grill . . . Fried scallops and onion soup at Occidental . . . O'Donnell's beer . . . More seafood at Hall's . . . Wun Kow if you want to dine Chinese . . . Chicken soup at Union Station's Savarin . . . also glass of half and half . . . Open-face sandwiches at Willard Coffee Shop.

That this should have to happen to thee now
Seems such a shame. O would thou couldst disgorge
Thy vicious venom on these vandals! Thou
Wouldst fling on them thy unrelenting wrath—
On them who case thee in with this stark steel,
Who thus submit thee to thy primal bath. . .
O Obelisk, we know just how you feel!

If Washington were living at this hour,
Thinkest thou he would condone this cruel dip,
Or let them scale his sacred memory's tower
To desecrate thee to thy very tip?
To us thou didst not seem so awfully dirty:
Thy snail-increasing dark was rather pretty.

Charwomen Probe Slated.

Reports on what is being done to save the jobs of 1,800 Treasury employes, facing dismissal under the McKellar rider to the emergency appropriation bill, will be heard tonight at the meeting of the Civil Service Reinstatement League at the Thomson Community Center at 8 o'clock.

Interviews with the White House secretariat, Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau and other officials have been sought by a league committee since its mass meeting last week. The league plans to launch an investigation of conditions under which the Government charwomen work. The league also will plan a new line of attack on Section 213 of the economy act (the marriage clause) tonight.

Mrs. Maude M. Anderson, Internal Revenue, last night formally launched her plan to provide cheaper hospitalization for Federal employes when the Government Employes Sick Benefit Association was incorporated, with her as president. Six other Government workers, representing as many departments, were elected to association offices.

ORDERS for reservations indicate that more than 1,500 persons will attend the testimonial dinner to Public Printer A. E. Giegengack, it was revealed yesterday by John A. McLean, superintendent of platemaking, Government Printing Office, in charge of the Washington subcommittee on arrangements. Assisting Mr. McLean are Bert Bair, superintendent of press work, and William Cassidy, assistant purchasing agent.

Arrangements have been made with the Pennsylvania Railroad for special cars for Washingtonians planning to attend the dinner, which will be held October 26 at the Waldorf Astoria in New York, Mr. McLean said. The special section will leave Washington at 1 p. m. Friday and return on the night of October 27. About 60 are expected to go from here, to be joined by a similar number in Baltimore, most of them members of the Craftsmen's Club.

Briefs Prepared In Phone Dispute

Richmond, Oct. 16 (AP).—The State corporation commission today had prepared majority and minority opinions for presentation before the State supreme court in the controversy over establishment of an independent long-distance telephone system in the Valley of Virginia.

The majority opinion, written by Lester Hooker, chairman, and concurred in by William Meade Fletcher, holds that the establishment should be prohibited on the ground that it would cause impairment of the efficiency of the service. Commissioner Thomas W. Oglin, in a minority opinion, argues that the commission is without authority to prevent independent companies now on the ground from connecting with each other and maintaining long-distance service over their lines. He further holds that circumstances do not justify perpetuating the present monopoly.

The independent companies are seeking to establish their own system connecting Clifton Forge, Waynesboro, Lexington, Natural Bridge and other communities in this area.

Cantacuzene Family Takes Home in City

Granddaughter of Grant Will Spend Season in Capital.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Hanbury-Williams Will Sail for England.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Mrs. Julia Grant Cantacuzene, who until last week was known to Capital society as Princess Cantacuzene, has taken an apartment at 2029 Connecticut avenue for the winter, and will reside there with her daughter, Miss Bertha Cantacuzene. This will be the first winter Mrs. Cantacuzene has spent the whole season in Washington for some years, having chosen to spend the winter months in Sarasota, Fla., where she has a winter home.

Last week, the Princess Cantacuzene, the former Julia Dent Grant, a granddaughter of President U. S. Grant, resumed her American citizenship after many years. With her marriage to Prince Michael Cantacuzene, of Russia, she became a Russian citizen, and it was not until her husband declared his intention of becoming an American, and took out his first papers, that she decided to take back her citizenship. Mrs. Cantacuzene has been interested in civic activities of American women for many years and is now en route to Florida, where she will attend the convention of the Women's Auxiliary of the American Legion, to open in Miami next week.

Mrs. Cantacuzene and her daughter have been at the Sulgrave Club for a fortnight, and on their return from the South at the end of the month will move to their new apartment. Miss Cantacuzene made her debut a number of years ago and since then has been making her home in Louisville, Ky. She will be welcomed by the host of young friends who remember her in her debutante days.

Mr. and Mrs. John Hanbury-Williams, son-in-law and daughter of Mrs. Cantacuzene, have been visiting here also and have left for New York. They will sail the end of the week for their home in England. Mrs. Hanbury-Williams was formerly Princess Ida Cantacuzene, and her marriage to the attractive young Englishman, which took place in St. John's Church several years ago, was one of the outstanding social events of that season.

He purchased the 6-year-old house, which includes a huge Spanish-Gothic living room, a cloister and a chapel, last summer from Mrs. Justine B. Ward, sister of Senator Bronson Cutting, who now resides in France. Mrs. Ward for many years devoted herself to the study and revival of the Gregorian Chant in the Catholic Church and developed the "Ward Method" of teaching singing.

The estate tops North Mountain and overlooks the Ardsley Club links, and is not far from Mr. Gould's boyhood home, Lyndhurst, at Irvington-on-Hudson, which is now the home of his sister, Mrs. Finley J. Shepard, the former Miss Helen Gould.

PILLAR to POST

Senor Capitan Colon Eloy Alfaro, the Minister of Ecuador, was pleased when his two sons, Eloy and Jaime, received the promises of appointments to West Point. The minister himself was a cadet at the United States Military Academy and looks back on the parade grounds and marching lines of gray against a picturesque background, with especial fondness, but above all he values the comradship founded in his student days. Recently he went to call upon Gen. MacArthur to thank him for the courtesies extended upon his arrival here as minister. The meeting was conducted in the most formal fashion until one of the general's aids entered the room.

"Hi there, Alfalfa!" the aid exclained inadvertently calling his former classmate by the nickname bestowed upon him years ago in the academy. The ice was broken and even the general smiled, and what a kick Minister Alfaro got out of being called Alfalfa!

That men are poor housekeepers is a notion that most women hold firmly fixed in their minds, for it gives them a comfortable assurance that as far as keeping the house is concerned they are quite indispensable. Behind their expressions of dismay and displeasure upon their return home from the mountains and the seashore to find the place in a mess lurks a feeling of gratification that their husbands will welcome them back if only to make the house livable again.

So it was with something of a shock that Mrs. Edward Loring Bliss found the Coast Guard station at Brigantine, N. J., as neat and tidy as the most fastidious housekeeper could wish, and with no woman within miles of the wild, windswept dunes. The floors had been scrubbed and sanded until they shone like the deck of a ship, the oil lamps gleamed with a high polish and everything else about the place where the guardsmen live was in perfect order.

Mrs. Bliss even peeked into the refrigerator and found it stocked with well-cooked food. She made an official report to Rear Admiral Harry G. Hamlet, commandant of the Coast Guard, at a recent cocktail party. "You say it was clean?" he queried, trying not to show his satisfaction too much. "That's as it should be!"

Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where —as She Sees It.

DEAR DIARY:

The other day—when I made some remark about long-distance driving, Silvine Clagett smiled sweetly and softly, explained that the day before she had motored up to Philadelphia, looked in on a tea for a moment, and then motored back. Nothing at all, merely a short jaunt.

Yesterday morning while frantically hunting for costumes, I ran into Louis Tarbet. He (at the time of the run-in) was attired in a "Barretts of Wimpole" suit. After much talking and looking (we were both discouraged), Louis decided to look for a spotted coat—and go as Tony, the pinto. But I am afraid that there isn't to be a pony ballet at the ball Saturday night.

Betty Marsh and Ken McCrimmon (he of the slide-rule troops) certainly were most serious in their game of "matches, put and take," or whatever you call it. I s'pose that they were matching their wits.

Methodist Women, Here for Convention, to Tackle Problem of Insufficient Mission Funds

Executive Body To Open Annual Sessions Today

Plenty of Volunteers Are Available but Money Is Held Lacking.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

WHEN A YOUNG person set out 20 years ago to convert heathens to Christianity, he was looked upon by his home community as something between a martyr and a hero. Today the missionary who receives a foreign post is rated a privileged and fortunate person. The missionary market, like many another, is glutted. There are plenty of young people who long to enter foreign mission fields, but the churches lack money to send them.

The Methodist Episcopal Church will attempt to solve this problem of sufficient volunteers and insufficient funds this week as the general executive committee of the Methodist Woman's Foreign Missionary Society holds its sixty-fourth annual session in Washington beginning today. In addition to financial matters, the meeting before it closes Sunday will consider recent developments in foreign mission fields.

Speakers will include missionaries who have left their stations long enough to attend sessions in the Capital. Fifty delegates from the United States, in addition to 75 missionaries, are in attendance.

Weathered Storm Well.

In spite of the lack of money to send out a new crop of workers to foreign countries, the Methodist Society believes it has weathered the storm pretty well.

"We haven't had to recall a single missionary for financial reasons," said Mrs. H. B. Moulton yesterday at the convention's headquarters in Foundry Methodist Church. A past president of the Washington district of the Methodist Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, she helped make arrangements for the present meeting. Chairman of the committee on arrangements is Mrs. Leo Paulger.

"Before the depression our society had an annual income of $200,000,000," explained Mrs. Moulton. "Now it has dropped to $135,000,000. But we've managed to keep all our workers in the field. That's more than some churches have been able to do."

India and China Appeal.

India and China hold the greatest appeal for would-be missionaries, according to Mrs. Moulton. She has been active in the society's work for 20 years; declares women are more interested in foreign missions than they ever were, and that the meetings of the society are better attended now than 20 years ago.

Among the foreign missionaries at the convention is Mrs. Robert E. Brown, of Wuhu, China. When she arrived in this country she was annoyed to learn Americans were concerned about the growth of Communism in China.

"Those reports on Communism in China are grossly exaggerated," she declared yesterday. "You people over here only hear the worst about us. Communism isn't as strong in China as it is in this country."

Mrs. Brown has lived in Wuhu, a city on the Yangtse, for almost 17 years. Her husband is head of the Methodist hospital there.

Says Christianity Gains.

"Christianity is gaining steadily in China," she said. "The only thing that retards it is a wave of nationalism now and then. Whenever one of those waves sweeps over the country we notice an anti-Christian feeling. But that's only natural. The Chinese associate Christianity with foreign influences. As soon as the nationalism dies down we are able to make rapid headway again."

Methodist missionaries are making great progress in India, especially among the young people, according to Miss Clementina Butler, who is in charge of an exhibit at the convention. Born in India, of missionary parents, she has closely followed the Christian movement in that country.

She was instrumental in having a Christian magazine published for the youth of India. Instead of filling it completely with Bible stories she saw to it that there were scientific articles.

Fights 'Bogeys' With Science.

"There's nothing better for combating superstitions than a few good scientific articles," she smiled. "It doesn't do a bit of good to tell an Indian his charms against the supposed evil influence of a comet won't work. But if you explain to him what a comet really is he'll forget all about silly charms such as putting tubs on top the house to ward off evil influence."

Miss Butler believes Christian pictures sent to foreign countries should be in keeping with the characteristics of the people of those countries.

"For years we gave Indians picture of the Christ Child showing Him with blue eyes and fair hair. No wonder they had a hard time believing He belonged to them as well as to the Western world. Now we are picturing Christ with dark hair and dark eyes and Oriental features. After all, He was an Oriental," concluded Miss Butler.

Girl Football Teams Causing Strong Protest

Toledo Champions Play in Kentucky and Ohio This Week.

By Ware Torrey and Janet Owen.

GIRL FOOTBALL players, recently organized into teams of their own, are adding new skirmishes of disagreement to the already controversial subject of football.

Girls' football, under fire of severe criticism from the American Physical Education Association and kindred organizations, is making a strong bid for survival through the East Toledo team of Toledo, Ohio.

The East Toledo team this fall starts its season with a clear record of victories, in games against Pennsylvania, Michigan, Indiana and Illinois teams last season, and against other teams from Western States.

The Toledo champions will play a girls' team in Newport, Ky., Saturday, and a team in Cincinnati Sunday. Their closest rivals are the Girls' Westside team of Toledo. They are not permitted to play against boys.

Exploitation Charged.

Football for girls was protested against with particular relation to the Toledo football league, at the last annual convention of the American Physical Education Association. In the opinion of the Women's Athletic Section of the A. P. E. A., the conduct of the games last season violated health policies of the association.

It was decided at the meeting to send written statements of disapproval to a number of influential organizations in Toledo. The girls were being exploited with disregard for principles of health protection or good sporting standards, according to the legislative committee of the Women's Athletic Section. And the committee maintained that the games were run for promotion purposes of a sporting goods concern, with display and gate receipts as their only objective.

Statements were sent to such organizations as the Toledo Chamber of Commerce, Federation of Women's Clubs and board of education, making it clear that the association was heartily opposed to the fact that a group of girls from 14 to 18 years of age had been playing professional football.

According to a statement received this week from the Toledo Board of Education, practically all of the women's organizations of the city and many of the men's organizations have gone on record as disapproving of the "exploitation of the girls."

Protest Based on Conditions.

Disapproval of the Women's Athletic Section is based on the conditions and purposes surrounding the contests, rather than the mere fact of girls playing football.

The question as to whether a modified form of football coached with regard for the health and sports principles of the players, would be a good sport for women, is being discussed with some heat in various sections.

Meanwhile the Toledo girls go into action, and the progress of the situation remains for the future to reveal.

Girls of the present East Toledo team are Ruth Wylin, captain and star back; Angie Myers, Jane Perry, Marge Freeman, Loas Jensen, Maxine Morris, Juanita Laberdee, Coral Dannberg, Sylvia Yourist, Adalia Tracy and Ruth Dilcart.

Shapely Figure For All Women Held Possible

By Frances Mangum.

CROESUS with all his gold and precious jewels would be a pauper if he paid the cosmetic bill for American women.

Government statistics reveal that more than a billion dollars a year goes for facial beauty, thanks to the fair sex's urge to be fairer. Every year women in this country alone use 100,000 tons of creams and skin lotions, 2,000 tons of rouge and 4,000 tons of face powder.

Asked to comment on these facts the other day in Chicago, Irene Castle (now Mrs. Frederic McLaughlin) said: "Why that's just as it should be! Every woman owes herself charm and should make every effort to have it. But her efforts fall short if she does not take proper care of her figure and use the means at her disposal for bodily charm, glamour, allure, or whatever it is that all women seek and all men admire."

Enviable Figures for All.

Miss Castle says that a beautiful face and a neglected figure always remind her of an exquisite Gothic spire on an old warehouse. She holds that nearly every woman can have an enviable figure if she takes only a little precaution.

"All that is necessary is regular and proper exercises to keep in condition and to develop grace of carriage and correct posture," she says.

"After that see that no bulginess is left free to spoil good lines and proper proportions. In this connection the new foundations of soft materials that move with the body while they still resist wayward curves are a God-send."

Correct Small Flaws.

Miss Castle admitted that all her life she has campaigned for "freedom of the figure," but during those days of a few years back when a corsetless fad was going strong a great many bulgy, ill-proportioned forms made her feel as though she was wrong.

But the distinction of a beautiful figure doesn't depend at all on whether one is plump or slim, she declared.

Girls football takes the gridiron this fall as the East Toledo team starts its season. The team plays in Kentucky and Cincinnati this week-end. Football for girls is the subject of much controversy, especially following the protest made by the American Physical Education Association against the so-called professional team playing last year in Toledo.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: Having noticed that your column is made up of cross-sections of everyday life, and having read "Martha's" letter in last Thursday's Post, I have decided to state my case.

"Martha" may see it, and realize how many of us there are, lonely and dependent on our children in our later years. My attention was called to "Martha's" letter by my daughter, my only child, with whom I make my home.

* * * *

I get up every morning at 6:30 and fix my son-in-law's breakfast and see him off to business; then I get the three grandchildren off to school. That morning, I was in the laundry, ironing, when my daughter came down at 10:30, with the paper and a cigarette, and said: "Here is something you should read. Maybe it will give you some suggestions. You are only 50."

I asked her, "What will you do without me? How will you get along?" She said: "Don't let me stop you. I will get a maid."

* * * *

But that very same girl did stop me many years ago from marrying a retired business man. She fussed and cried and carried on at the thought, and for love of her I refused him, 21 years ago. I devoted myself to her instead, was good and kind to her, gave her everything I ever had.

Continuing, she said: "How was J—— (her husband) this morning? Did nothing suit him, as usual?" I said, "Yes, and I feel in the way. I think he doesn't want me here." She said, "Well, mother, I think it is soon coming to that, as he is tired of keeping you, and he does want the home to himself. I wish you had had more children, so you would not have to be with me all the time."

* * * *

But you see, Miss Haworth, I can't meet anybody as I don't go out. My daughter is the one who goes out in this house, she and her husband. They go out most every night. When I get the children bathed and ready for bed, I go to bed, too. I have no money of my own.

I could keep house and take care of a husband, but I can not work for strangers as I have hip trouble and they would not want me, I am sure.

* * * *

Today, after baking a cake and making some special sandwiches for my daughter's bridge party, I was no longer needed, so I have gone off by myself and am writing to you. I hope "Martha" will see my letter. What is your advice in my case? My daughter may see your answer in the paper, but her friends, at least, will never know it is her mother writing. She is very nice to me when her friends are around, and she never tells anybody anything. MARY.

Make Your Own Way.

DEAR MARY: My advice in your case is to make up your mind strongly, quietly, unalterably, that you are going to have a life of your own, self-sufficient, independent, apart from your daughter, her husband and their children.

Let nothing shake that determination, that conviction, that intention. Having thus stretched the broad, clean canvas for a new picture of your life, bit by bit and step by step, as surely as you hold absolutely to that intention, so surely will the details of its achievement supply themselves and fall in place.

* * * *

To remain passively in your present unwanted, unappreciated, unpaid position is to forswear your claim to self-respect or the respect of others. Few persons respect those who do not respect themselves.

It goes without saying your daughter is a selfish, lazy ingrate. Since she indorses her husband's sentiments that your services are not needed and your presence superfluous in her home, the very least she might do is suit her actions to her words, take over the burden of the housework, 24-hour responsibility for the children and the details of preparations incident to entertaining.

* * * *

However, she gives the lie to her own attitude and involuntarily confesses you are more than paying your way, by admitting if and when you leave she may get a maid to take your place. What domestic would accept a place with dawn-to-bedtime duties in return for room, board and scant courtesy, and what woman worthy of the name would dare make such an offer?

Moreover, if it is true she willfully stood in the way of your marrying, 21 years ago, she freely invited the responsibility of caring for you in your later years. On the other hand, you sowed the seed of the heartless treatment you are reaping today when you bent your adult will to her adolescent rule, and reared her in an atmosphere of foolishiy fond indulgence.

Food Selection For Byrd Party Difficult Task

Johns Hopkins Dietitian Who Helped Make List Tells Problems.

ALMOST AS thrilling as the Byrd Expedition itself was the job of planning what food those 40 husky explorers in the party would eat over a two-year period in Antarctica, according to Miss Kathleen Lewis, dietitian at Johns Hopkins, who assisted in the preparation of the famous food list. Miss Lewis was one of the distinguished guests who attended the American Dietetic Association luncheon at the Mayflower yesterday.

How to get as much of the right kind of food into the smallest possible space, and yet give the men turkey for Thanksgiving and plum pudding for Christmas, were among the problems that confronted the dietitians. With little or no information to go on, this group, under the direction of Alice M. Karslake, sat down and planned the list from a practical and scientific standpoint.

Taking the activities of the men and the temperature into consideration, they allowed each man 5,000 calories a day, dividing it proportionately into protein, carbohydrate and fat food contents.

Protein foods, according to Miss Lewis, were arranged in the form of dressed and canned meats, eggs, milk, cheese and nuts. The meat supply, they figured, would be embellished by the addition of fresh whale, seal and penguin. Evaporated milk was included for beverages and condensed or dried milk for cooking.

Cheese and Nuts Included.

Cheese and nuts, because of their concentrated food value and storage possibilities, were included in quantities. Of the carbohydrates, whole grain cereals were recommended for their mineral and vitamin content.

Two lists of fruit and vegetables were made. The first included fresh and canned foods, and the second an equivalent amount of dried foods.

The most perplexing problem, according to Miss Lewis, came when the dietitians contemplated the homely potato. Knowing potatoes would keep only four months under the most favorable conditions, the dietitians partially solved the problem with the use of potato chips.

Separate List for Sledders.

In addition to the food for the expedition in winter quarters, a separate list had to be made for the sledding parties. This contained only very concentrated foods which could be eaten raw or cooked. On this list was pemmican, Eskimo biscuit, dried vegetables, dried milk, dried orange juice, sugar, flour, bacan and milk chocolate.

Pemmican, which is a ground, dried beef, mixed with suet and raisins, is usually made into a thick stew with bacon, flour and dried vegetables, and eaten with Eskimo biscuit.

And for fear the diet might become too monotonous the dieticians planned dinners for both Thanksgiving and Christmas. The list included turkey, plum pudding, cranberries and pickles.

New Hadassah Leader Views Post as Privilege

"The hope of Hadassah is to contribute toward building a center in Palestine where the Jew may have a home and not be forced to live as a guest on sufferance," says Mrs. Edward Jacobs, newly elected president of the organization.

Mrs. Edward Jacobs Says Organization Is Now Seeking to Build Up Medical Educational Center Near Jerusalem.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

BEING PRESIDENT of Hadassah is nothing new to Mrs. Edwards Jacobs, elected yesterday to succeed Mrs. Samuel W. Halprin as leader of the women's Zionist organization of America.

"I've been president before," she said, modestly, "but filling the position now is a special privilege—and a special responsibility.

"Hadassah is now entering the second epoch in its history. In the first it built up a comprehensive health program which was gradually absorbed by communities in Palestine. It now enters an epoch in which it hopes to build up a medical educational center around the Hadassah University Hospital, which will be erected on Mount Scopus near Jerusalem."

The cornerstone for this hospital was laid in Palestine yesterday, she said, while the morning assembly of the convention was being held here. She explained it is the aim of Hadassah to raise enough funds during the next three years so the doors of the hospital may be opened on the twenty-fifth birthday of the organization, in March, 1937.

Climax of Program.

"That will be the culminating glory of our health program in Palestine," Mrs. Jacobs said, "and the greatest contribution Jewish womanhood has yet made toward the building of a civilization where Jews may live, work and create normally.

"All members of our organization are fired with enthusiasm to make Palestine a center where the Jew may have a home as a right and where he will not be a guest on sufferance. We realized in order to build such a center health conditions had to be the best possible. That is why we have concerned ourselves mainly with the health program. We have conducted the work successfully in the past, and we shall do so in the future."

Tall, stately and silver haired, Mrs. Jacobs, it would seem, is the ideal person to head the 40,000 women who make up the Women's Zionist Organization of America.

One of the first members of Hadassah, she has been closely associated with the work of establishing and maintaining the Palestinian health program for more than a score of years.

In addition to serving in a number of offices for the organization, she has been in charge of many important committees.

Enthusiastic About Movement.

The work of Hadassah has been such a vital part of her life she can not conceive of how any Jewish woman could remain out of the organization.

"There is so much for Jews to do at the present time," she said, "they must present a united front. Our slogan for the coming membership drive is 'every Jewish woman has a place in Hadassah'; and considering the many projects we are undertaking in Palestine, this is literally true."

Mrs. Jacobs is so enthusiastic about the Zionist movement she hopes some day to follow the example of many Jews and go to Palestine to live.

"It is my hope to be able to cast my lot with those who have made their homes in the Near East while I am still in the vigor of life," she said. "I want to live in Palestine, the logical center of Jewish civilization, because I believe that is the way I can find fulfillment, spiritually, as a Jew."

Frances Stern Stresses Diet As Health Aid

Noted Food Expert Recounts Establishment of Her First Clinic.

FOOD IS A medicine which the vertical patient needs just as badly as the horizontal one.

Frances Stern, who claims the food clinic as her own child—and a husky, growing one at that—twinkled merrily at her own little joke when she said this yesterday at the Mayflower, where she is attending the Seventeenth annual meeting of the American Dietetic Association.

Then she hastened to explain—lest someone think she took her work lightly, which she certainly does not—that she has devoted the last 20 years to making a balanced diet possible for sick people and low-paid industrial workers.

"What I mean is that patients who are able to walk around need a correct diet just as much as those in the hospitals," she said, "and that is why I first established the food clinic at the Boston Dispensary.

"You see when I was a young girl I used to do social service work in hospital clinics, and I used to hear doctors tell patients with tuberculosis they should have a nutritious diet. And when I saw their bewildered faces I knew they didn't know what that meant. And when I saw their poor clothes I knew they couldn't have the proper nutrition on the income they had. I decided something must be done."

So in 1918 the first food clinic was established. There patients who go to the medical and dental clinics can go and learn about food values.

"We try to make a nutritious diet that will fit the pocketbook of every patient," Miss Stern said. "For instance, if a patient only has $5 a week to spend on food he can't spend it the same way he would if he had $10. But there are certain elements he must have. We try to work this out.

"We have 900 patients a month at the Boston food clinic. And there are 30 nationalities represented. That brings up another problem. We have to give the people their national food. For instance, Jewish people have to have kosher food, so we give it to them. We give the Italians their macaroni and so on down the list.

"We give the children lessons in food values while they are waiting to go in and see the doctor. We give the facts to them in the form of fairy tales. They just love their classes."

An important part of the food clinic is in getting the backgrounds of the patients, for the whole of a person's life is affected by the food he eats, Miss Stern declared.

In contrast to the usual drab medical clinic, the food clinic is a cheerful, lovely place, with pretty pictures on the walls, bright curtains, and the meals are served on attractive trays.

Pre-Facial Set Yields Secret Of Fresh Skin

Consists of Rich And Lathery Soap and Scientific Brush.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

THOSE ON the side of soap and water score again. This time it's with the advent of a new "pre-facial" set, which consists of a rich and lathery complexion soap plus a scientific complexion brush, with the same fine bristles which stroke the hair, skin and teeth of the English royal family.

The soap, a compound of concentrated milk from which all fat has been removed, comes in a smartly designed ivory-tinted composition bowl surmounted by a pastel ball. When the moistened brush is swished over it a time or two it yields a soft, soothing, creamy lather, which some say is the secret of those pink and white English skins. At any rate, the stimulating effect of the fine bristled brush plus the super cleansing qualities of the soap will make the complexion as "fresh as an English garden."

Physicians, dermatologists and cosmeticians agree that the first and most important steps in preserving a good complexion or normalizing the pores and regulating the secretions of the sebaceous glands are to keep the skin scrupulously clean, free of fatty residue and to give it sufficient exercise to maintain its firmness and health.

Many of these authorities on skin care assert that the daily cleansing with soap and water, and the stimulating action of brush and razor contribute largely to the fact that men have, as a general rule, clearer complexions and fewer wrinkles than their contemporaries of the fair sex, and that they seem practically immune to sallowness and clogged pores.

This mild, fine lather together with the action of the brush will dissolve unassimilated fats and will remove grease and dust which otherwise resist dislodging.

It's a set which may be recommended for freeing the pores of impurities, awakening sluggish tissues, correcting sallowness, starting the skin about its business of keeping itself in good condition, purifying, soothing, and toning the skin, and refining the pores.

Tricky Lamps Displayed.

A new light is cast on the lamp subject by the dozens of tricky lamps displayed in the notions department of a local store.

One of them will set Junior jumping up and down and clapping his hands. It's a miniature drum with frosted glass sides, complete even to the red and blue trimmings. Instead of beating a tattoo on it, however, he presses a button and it literally glows. Wouldn't he love it by the side of his bed. P. S. It's quite inexpensive.

Perfumes With Fancy Names.

The names tickle one's curiosity. "My Sin" and "Scandal!" What must such perfume be like? Since especially priced bottles arrived in a downtown store many shoppers are finding out.

They stop by the counter for a casual sniff, and presto, before they know it they've succumbed to the charm of "My Sin" or "Scandal."

Snuggle Scarfs.

Snuggle scarfs are all their name implies. They are made of the softest, lightest silk imaginable, so that when they're knotted around your neck they cuddle right up to your chin.

The vivid and attractive patterns suit them ideally to fall coats. Some people are wearing them for collars because of their casual, chic fit.

Many of them are Chinese red with dozens of varicolored figures between the four corners. Others with green, blue or black backgrounds are just as frenziedly and gayly designed.

Some of these scarfs are in a Chinese Paisley pattern, with colors and strange figures running rampant all over them.

For Sewing Emergencies.

Offhand you'd say it was a small purse. Small but smart. When you open it you find it's a sewing kit as complete as any large one. There are needles by the handful, pins, a sharp pair of tiny scissors and a thimble.

What a boon it is! You tuck it away in your larger handbag and you're armed for ripped seams, snagged hose or any of the other minor catastrophes that beset the wardrobe at unlooked-for times. Or if you're going on a trip it fits quite easily into the pocket of your suit case, and you're ready for any sewing emergency.

Lacquered Russian Bowls.

Anywhere from 25 cents to $1.50 it's possible to buy those glossy-lacquered gold, red, and black Russian bowls, spoons, boxes. Strangely enough they look rather ponderously heavy but when you lift, say the largest bowl on the table, you're amazed to see how feather weight it is.

There's a cigarette box, too, somewhat cylindrical in shape, which will be lovely on some low fireside table. Another one in the same design and identical colors is lower and wider.

The most startling is, of course, a dish matching the others but hollowed out in the shape of a duck. This is fine for nuts and raisins.

Tunic Cut on a Bias Makes Striking Costume

No. 808

MANY OF THE smart costumes of the season feature blouses or tunics. Especially new is the tunic, and especially smart is the flared tunic. This one is cut on the bias and features a soft draped neckline, long fitted sleeves and a tied girdle. It can be as formal as you wish, depending on the fabric. Of lame or satin, it transforms a plain skirt into a striking afternoon gown.

Very smart, too, is the overblouse, with its draped neck held by a straight band from the built-up waistline. The sleeves are just below the elbow and pleasantly full. Either the tunic or overblouse may be made easily, even by an amateur.

Silk, faille or wool crepe are other suitable fabrics for the tunic; canton crepe or silk crepe would be nice for the overblouse. Sizes are 14 to 41. Yardage requirements are on the envelope.

How to Keep Ahead of Food Price Increase

BUY "AROUND" the jumping food prices, advises the Bureau of Home Economics, and then proceeds to tell how to do it.

The trick lies in listing the foods with high nutritive value and then choosing the ones which cost the least.

"Rarely, if ever, is the most expensive meal the best one from a food value standpoint," say the food experts.

Dried skim milk can be used instead of fresh milk for cooking. It has the same food value. If the grocer doesn't stock it, buy it at the baker's or ice cream maker's. It will keep about a month in a tightly closed jar kept in a cool place.

Irish and sweet potatoes are interchangeable, and sweet potatoes are cheaper in the South.

Beans and Peas Cheapest.

Dried beans and peas are the cheapest crop, next to grain, almost everywhere in the world, and their food value is high.

Use plenty of cabbage, says the bureau, for the green and leafy vegetables should be on every menu. Cabbage is usually the cheapest of all leafy vegetables.

Turnip tops are just as good a food as broccoli or asparagus, and they are cheaper. Carrots, used raw, cut into sticks or grated, are a good and inexpensive food.

Tomato juice and the juice from oranges or grapefruit are interchangeable and tomatoes are usually cheaper. Even the baby may have either. The canned tomato supply is expected to be 14 per cent higher this year than last, and hence inexpensive.

More fruits have been canned this year than last, so the prices should stay down. And the price-wary cook also can use dried prunes, peaches and apricots.

When it comes to meats this winter, the cook really must use some ingenuity since they are likely to be more scarce and therefore higher in price.

Swiss Steak Suggested.

The bureau experts suggest making Swiss steak from cheap cuts of meat which can neither be broiled nor made into pot roast. Hash or stew can be made from plate beef, and it is just as nutritious as porterhouse or sirloin steak. Also the cheapest liver is just as high in food value as the most expensive.

Fish is a good substitute for meat, particularly canned salmon and tuna, in which there is no waste.

Eggs are important on any menu, but since they will not be plentiful this winter the cook can put a little more milk, cheese and lean meat or fish on the table, and cut down on the eggs used.

What Today Means

"Libra."

IF October 17 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:30 a. m. to 12:30 p. m., from 2:30 to 4:30 p. m. and from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:30 to 9:30 a. m., from 12:30 to 2:30 p. m. and from 9:30 to 11:30 p. m.

On this October 17 trivial affairs, unworthy of serious consideration, may crop up and if allowed to distract your attention from really important matters, might absorb entirely too much valuable time, so be on your guard against this happening. Friends may be rather prone to volunteer free advice on subjects they are not thoroughly familiar with, so it might be well to weigh it carefully before accepting it. This might not be a good day to decide hurriedly on a plan of action, which if given more thought may be regarded in an entirely different light. If possible avoid any form of litigation, for it is possible you will find there is more truth than fallacy in the saying that a poor compromise is sometimes better than the best law suit that can be conceived. Home entertainments may possibly prove more enjoyable than ones given in large noisy places. Married and engaged couples, as well as those desiring to plight their troth, may save themselves a lot of trouble if they abstain from that form of wit classified as "wise-cracking."

If a woman and October 17 is your natal day, you are probably too ready to believe what others tell you, especially if they profess it to be a hard luck story. It might also prove advisable to remember there are always two sides to every story

Old-Time Fireplace Coming Back in Style

It looks as if the old-time fireplace, the hearth of which once was the meeting place for almost every family, is coming back into style. Giving away to coal for a number of years, wood for fuel is now coming back in a big way.

According to a recent report from the Forest Service division, Interior Department, there has been a large increase in the amount of wood used for fuel in the last three years.

Unusual Ways Of Preparing Meats Listed

Miss Ruth Chambers, of the National Live Stock and Meat Board, who is conducting The Washington Post cooking school in Washington Auditorium this week, suggests the following unusual ways of using meat. The school will continue Wednesday and Thursday afternoons and Friday evening.

By Ruth Chambers.

TODAY I AM suggesting that you try some kind of a cold-meat combination (a delicious jellied meat loaf or meat mousse) for the main dish at your next party. Meat dishes which you can serve cold may be prepared ahead of time and kept in the refrigerator. The clever hostess is the one who uses her refrigerator to every possible advantage. She plans her menus in such a way that she can spend her time entertaining her guests instead of worrying about her luncheon.

After planning the main dish for your party, the other foods seem to fall into line without difficulty, so I'm going to give you several recipes for the main dish, any of which will be delicious.

Sweetbreads are always favorite delicacies so I've selected a sweetbread mousse for you:

Sweetbread Mousse.

1 cup hot stock
¼ cup cold water
1 pimento
1 tablespoon gelatin
1 cup sweetbreads
½ cup whipping cream
Salt
Pepper

Soak gelatin in cold water and slightly, add sweetbreads, which have been blanched and finely chopped. When this begins to stiffen, fold in the cream, whipped stiff. Decorate a mold with pieces of pimento. Pour in the sweetbread mixture and set aside to chill. When thoroughly set, unmold, and garnish with watercress and radish roses.

It may be well if you haven't used sweetbreads often, to know what they are. True sweetbreads are the thymus glands of a calf or young beef—there are two in each animal—one rather round gland, the heart sweetbread, and the other, a long gland, the throat sweetbread. Sometimes the pancreas is sold as a sweetbread too—but this organ is not a true sweetbread.

Blanching Directions.

A question which may occur to you is about that part of the preparation of the sweetbreads called "blanching." This is a sort of precooking operation which helps to make the meat firm and easier to handle. In blanching sweetbreads, we cook them gently in slightly acidulated water, about one tablespoonful of vinegar or lemon juice to a quart of water will be the proportion. It will require about half an hour for this cooking method, which should always be used for sweetbreads, regardless of how they will be prepared later.

Another mousse recipe which I like uses ham and makes a beautiful platter when unmolded and ready to serve. Here is the recipe:

Jellied Veal.

3 pounds knuckle of veal
½ cup of chopped celery
½ teaspoon pepper
¼ cup sliced carrots
½ medium-sized onion
1 teaspoon salt

Put meat, celery, carrots and onion in kettle and let simmer until tender. Let the liquid cook down until it makes about 1 cup; strain and set aside. When the meat is nearly cold cut into tiny cubes; remove the fat from the broth. Reheat and stir the veal into it, add salt and pepper and other seasoning (if desired) and cooked vegetables. Pack into loaf pan or mold. Place a piece of wax paper over the meat and on this place a weight. Let stand until cold and set. Allow 3 hours to mold.

When you are cooking the veal do not allow the water to boil. It should just simmer if you want juicy, flavorful veal for your jellied veal mold.

Lamb in mint jelly makes an excellent dish for the party supper. Here is the way it is prepared:

JENNIFER HALE

By Bob Eden

Wanted in Los Angeles in connection with the murder of David Corey, Jennifer Hale changes her name to Mary Dixon and takes a boat for Seattle. The ship is wrecked and a man who introduces himself as Kent Severn helps her into a lifeboat, from which they are taken on board the Ardeth.

JENNIFER knew Kent was looking at her—sometimes his intent gaze made her uncomfortable—so she was carefuly as she answered. "At the moment I'm not working, but I shall be soon. My company went under just before I took my vacation." She felt her face grow warm as she spoke. It was hard for her to lie so deliberately. Even at home, when she had to lie to Cornelia Hale, it was hard. Her aunt always said that she was a poor liar.

"Too bad. Say! I need another stenographer in my department. You're hired! Start to work tomorrow, or whenever you feel like it."

"You're joking——"

"I'm not. Never was so serious in my life. I mean it. Can't pay a lot, but I'll stretch it $5 a week for you. Let's say $25 a week. That enough?"

"You're still joking."

Severn tossed his cigarette into the water.

"But I'm not. My dad's the Severn Lumber Co., and if you read my card right, young lady, you would have seen that I'm the manager of the sales department. Quite a department if I do say it as I shouldn't. And I'm not going to take no for an answer. It's settled. You're coming to work for me as soon as you want to—as soon as you get over this shipwreck. Now what's your phone number?"

Set of Lies.

"We haven't a phone—at home now. Let me call you."

"Well, you've an address, haven't you?"

Out of the almost forgotten recesses of her mind, Mary remembered the address of a girl who had once lived in Seattle, and who had come down to work in Los Angeles at the same office where she was working. Twice Mary had mailed letters for the girl, and in some way the address had remained with her.

Kent wrote it down carefully on one of his cards, and Mary knew from the way he was writing that as soon as she found a place to stay, she must call him, and tell him she had moved. Because if she didn't he would go out to 1136 West Second street and find that Mary Dixon was absolutely unknown there. For a moment she was frightened, but the fear passed away quickly.

"And you are coming to work for me," he said as he put the card away.

"Yes, I'm coming to work for you." Well, why shouldn't she? She had to have a job some place, and out of a clear sky, Kent Severn had offered her a place in his office. It was like an answer to a prayer. Pure, sheer luck. Luck—there it was again. How much longer would it last?

Ardeth Docked.

An officer of the Ardeth came along. "I can make room for the lady inside now if it's too cold out here," he suggested.

Mary rose both thankfully and regretfully. She didn't want to leave Kent Severn and yet she felt she should. He was starting to ask her too many embarrassing questions, and until she could decide what her answers would be, she would be safer inside. So she followed the officer into one of the cabins where seven other women and two children were trying to get some rest.

At midnight the Ardeth docked in Seattle, and as soon as the gangplanks were down four newspaper photographers and three newsreel cameramen boarded her. Because there was no help for it, Mary Dixon posed with six other women for pictures, her hat pulled well down over her face. She purposely moved as the shutters clicked.

Gouges Out Diamond.

The dock was a confusion of policemen, excited relatives, idle curiosity seekers. She lost Severn as soon as she was down the gangplank, and as quickly as she could hurried to the street, where she took a taxi to a hotel. Hers was the first car to pull away. Five minutes later she was explaining to the hotel clerk that she was one of the passengers of the Grace Larsen and that her baggage would be delayed a day, for the Ardeth hadn't been able to take both the Grace Larsen's passengers and their baggage.

Ten minutes later she was in her room, counting her money and discovering that she had $5 left of the $50 she had started with. But she wasn't worried. In her purse was a diamond ring which had been her mother's and which Cornelie Hale had given her on her twenty-first birthday. Before she undressed she gouged the stone from its Tiffany setting with her pocket nail file. Tomorrow, before she looked for a permanent place to live, she'd pawn the diamond. The ring she'd have to throw into the Sound, for it was engraved, Jerrald to Jennifer, June, 1911. Her mother's name had been Jennifer, too.

Kent Severn kept his family waiting an hour at the dock while he searched for Mary. It was only his mother's insistence that finally dragged him away.

"Her people must have met her," he muttered as he got into the Severn limousine.

Mary looked around. The living room was small, and not too well furnished, either. Its one window gave on the back alley. The pull-down bed was in a closet, and off the closet was a bathroom. In addition to a stove, the kitchenette contained a sink, an ice box and a table and two chairs.

Best She Could Do.

"A nice homey little apartment," Mrs. Bennett, the manager of Thornley Arms, said decisively. "You couldn't find one better at the price. I've some others but they are more expensive. If you don't take this, I can rent it within an hour at the price."

Mary supposed she could. It was cheap enough. Thirty dollars, with everything included, light, gas, heat and laundry. Yet it wasn't exactly what she wanted. She would have liked more light, a little better furniture, a little more comfort. Still, she couldn't be too particular. She had to have a place in a hurry. There was no time to search around, things being as they were.

"Will $10 in advance do?" She turned her eyes away from the faded green rep curtains hanging at the window.

Mary decided she didn't like the Thornley Arms manager any better than she liked the apartment, and that the less she saw of Mrs. Bennett the better she would be for it. The whiney, ingratiating voice, the black hair so obviously dyed over the pale, too powdered forehead, the pearls, big as marbles, choked around the fat, creased neck, the small, greenish eyes set too close together.

As she watched Mrs. Bennett tuck the two bills in her bosom, she was almost sorry she had made up her mind so quickly. It might have been better, after all, to take more time.

"Maid service is a dollar a week extra. Will you want that?"

"No," Mary answered quickly. She didn't want any one rummaging through her things. The job of keeping the apartment clean would give her something to do in her spare time, anyway.

"Where did you say you worked?"

Network of Lies.

Mary hadn't said, but she told Mrs. Bennett now that she was employed at the Severn Lumber Co.

"Worked there long?"

"Quite long," she lied, sure now that she should have looked a little longer for an apartment. Mrs. Bennett was entirely too curious.

"Nice place to work, I hear. I had a man once last year who worked there. He couldn't say enough about the company. You're on your vacation, I suppose?"

Again Mary lied and said she was on her vacation. She wished Mrs. Bennett would give her the key and go, but Mrs. Bennett wasn't ready to go yet. She was enjoying herself hugely, as she always did, when she admitted new tenants. She liked to know all about her people.

"One of the Severn boys was on the Grace Larsen that hit a rock, but I imagine you know that." Mrs. Bennett didn't wait for Miss Dixon to assent or deny the statement. "The one named Kent. The morning paper has the whole story—must have been pretty bad. Read it?"

Newspaper Offered.

"No, I haven't read the morning paper." Instantly Mary knew she should have lied once more for Mrs. Bennett's greenish eyes opened to their widest capacity.

"Haven't read it! For goodness' sakes and one of your bosses on board! Why, I'll go right down and get my paper for you." Without leaving the key, Mrs. Bennett hurried out, and she was back five minutes later puffing from her journey up the two flights of stairs, the paper in her hand. "There, now, you just read it. Don't save the paper for me, throw it away. I've finished with it. And here's your key, take good care of it because if you lose it, you'll have to pay for having another made. Anything more I can do?"

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

The Symptom of Jaundice.

NUMEROUS passages from general literature may be found in which the symptom called jaundice is associated with a querulous, crabbed and fault-finding disposition. For example, Samuel Garth in his poem, "The Dispensatory," says, "He was naturally querulous and jaundiced in his views." Other allusions are "reason loses her faculties, the mind becomes jaundiced," "the fact is too manifest for the most jaundiced eye to escape seeing it," and her "jealousy with a jaundiced look appears." These expressions rose from the fact that the person whose liver is not functioning normally, or who has a concentration of bile in the blood generally manifests an unhappy disposition because of the physical discomfort.

The yellow color of the skin due to the absorption of bile is a sufficiently common symptom to be familiar. One of the causes is obstruction of the liver and the gall bladder ducts due to gallstones or tumors pressing upon and hence closing these important channels. Bile pigment may be deposited in the whites of the eyes.

Catarrhal jaundice is the most common type and indicates, as a rule, some disease of the liver cells. Occasionally catarrhal jaundice occurs in what appears to be epidemic form. The disease continues for from two to eight weeks and is characterized by aches and pains, loss of appetite, nausea and vomiting, and usually some fever. There is a decrease in the flow of bile from the liver.

Treatment depends on the cause. In catarrhal jaundice every effort must be made to eliminate the toxins causing damage to the liver. This may be assisted by drinking large quantities of fluids, by rest in bed, and by giving sugar solution in as large amounts as the patient can stand. Fats and proteins can be eliminated from the diet. In obstructive jaundice caused by a gallstone or tumor, attention must be directed to removing the obstructive agent. In the hemolytic type, once the disease in fully established and clearly recognized, removal of the spleen is strongly advised.

Loose Curls Are Banned by Hairdressers

NEW YORK, Oct. 16 (Spl.). Women who have been letting their curls lie loosely around the nape of the neck had better be looking for a new hair arrangement.

The fashionable tendency is to direct the sweep of the hair upward, according to the decree of the New York Hairdressers and Cosmetologists Association. The new style calls for a continuation of the tiny ringlets, but they must be trained toward the top of the head, leaving the neck bare.

The hairdressers feel the drooping style was a sign of the depression. According to one member of the association, "It was the most neglected looking style we have had in history. Women just plainly let their hair hang down, with a curl or two on the end. Untidy—most untidy—even when they wore a coat. But the new fashion will be well-groomed, and will be a much better representation of the hairdresser's art."

A pun is well defined as the lowest form of humor, but a few hundred years ago an ill-chosen pun like the one given above proved to be good grounds for legal execution in at least one case. Sir William Collingborne's poetic pun, quoted here, caused his death as an enemy of Richard III, King of England.

The hog referred to in the pun was the king himself—on his escutcheon was a white boar. The rat was Ratcliff, the cat was Catesby, and the dog was Lovel. Lovel in those days was a common name for pet dogs. All three, Ratcliff, Catesby and Lovel, were agents of Richard III, whose policies were ridiculed in Collingborne's poem. Ridicule of the king was treason, and treason was death.

Richard came to the throne in 1483, upon the death of Edward IV, who was killed by his brother, the Duke of Clarence. Last of his dynasty, the Plantagenets, he ruled for less than two years. He was killed in the fall of 1485 by Henry Tudor, ending the War of the Roses. Henry VII succeeded him as the first of the Tudors.

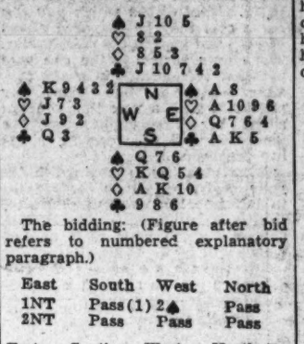
Double-Dummy Defense.

The question of the best defense against notrump contracts is always a difficult one, particularly when these contracts are reached without any suit having been bid by the Declarer. It is a difficult and usually impossible matter to locate every missing honor until the later stages of the hand. However, as each trick is played the defense is able to glean more and more information, and a player who is at all awake to the situations which arise can very frequently make each one of his plays the perfect one—that is, the one he would make if all four hands were exposed.

On the hand below South first chose the best possible Opening lead and followed up this lead by a very fine entry-creating play to defeat an opposing game contract.

East, Dealer.
North and South vulnerable
East and West not vulnerable; part-score 30.



The bidding: (Figure after bid refers to numbered explanatory paragraph.)

East	South	West	North
1NT	Pass (1)	2♠	Pass
2NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

East South West North

1—South's failure to double, in view of the part-score, must be characterized as being slightly over-conservative despite the vulnerability situation.

Naturally marking most of the strength in the Declarer's hand, South decided not to open from any of his tenace holdings, but made what seemed to be the safest lead—the club nine. The Declarer won this trick with the Queen in Dummy and immediately took a heart finesse, playing the nine from his hand. South won the trick with the Queen and, having noticed his partner signal with the 7 at trick one, continued with the club 8. The Declarer won this trick in his own hand and entered Dummy by a low spade to the King, naturally hoping that the heart honors were divided, which the percentages seemed to favor. When the second heart finesse lost, South persistently continued with his third club. At this point a way of putting his partner in had appeared to him.

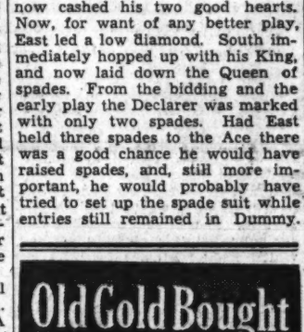
The Declarer won the third round of clubs with the Ace and now cashed his two good hearts. Now, for want of any better play, East led a low diamond. South immediately hopped up with his King, and now laid down the Queen of spades. From the bidding and the early play the Declarer was marked with only two spades. Had East held three spades to the Ace there was a good chance he would have raised spades, and, still more important, he would probably have tried to set up the spade suit while entries still remained in Dummy.

Thus the North hand was marked at this point with the once-guarded Jack and the Queen lead would set it up as an entry. The Declarer won with the Ace in his own hand and now had to lead another diamond. South won the trick, of course, and led his low spade, and since North had carefully preserved one of his good clubs, he was able to win the last two tricks and thus defeat East's contract.

Admittedly the Declarer could have made the hand had he known the way the cards were distributed. Had East gone ahead and boldly played for a 3-to-3 spade break, keeping the club Queen in Dummy as an entry, he could have made two-odd, and even by tackling the diamond suit he would have fulfilled his contract the way the cards were divided. However, I am inclined to think that East adopted the line of play which the percentages favored. There was no reason for East to believe that both heart honors would be in the South hand, and even if they were, the contract still might have been made had South not been on his toes, and had the foresight to lead the Queen of spades.

Tomorrow's Hand.

South, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.



This hand will be discussed in tomorrow's article.

Coal Reparations Proposed to I. C. C.

Examiner Upholds Rates to Virginia Points.

Examiner W. R. Brennan recommended to the Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday that reparation claims be entertained for nearly 200 shipments of coal from mines in Virginia, West Virginia and Kentucky to points in Virginia, the Associated Press reported.

The examiner proposed that rates on coal prescribed recently by the commission to Virginia points, be upheld, recommending that new rates be ordered for other points not included in the previous decision. The new rates recommended were in line with those prescribed in the earlier cases.

The points involved are in southern Virginia, principally Lynchburg, Roanoke, Martinsville, Staunton, Salem, Christiansburg, East Radford, Wytheville and Blacksburg.

BLACKIE BEAR
By D. SAM COX

"Some More Circus Folks' Stuff"

Jay Bird has traveled a lot, and he says that nowhere in the world is there a place where things don't stop and rest a bit some time or other except around Bear Creek. He says that every man he ever knew takes a rest spell once in a while, but no such spell ever seems to come to the Creek folks. Blackie keeps right on saying that he has plenty of everything to last him for ever so long, and then something like that cone-grinding starts up, and there's some more work to do. But no matter how much there is to do, you may just bet that Jay Bird is right around the corner when it starts, and is either taking a hand in it or looking all over it while it is going on. And sometimes his temper gets the best of him when he sees something that he doesn't like going on, and then he quarrels awfully. But people don't understand his language, and so they don't pay any attention to him. And I have seen him hop from limb to limb, and laugh till it looked like his throat would pop open. No matter how much he may love a dog, the funniest thing in the world to him is a little tabby cat running a big dog, and he has seen it several times.

But this is the morning after Jocko got the new syrup, and Jay Bird had no idea of missing the look on Mr. Man's face when he came to the cane mill and missed those two big buckets, so he was up by the time it was light, and when Mr. Man came out to start a fire under his syrup bonler Jay Bird was hopping about and making a good breakfast off of cane seed. Mr. Man made the fire, shuffled his dippers and things around, and then he started to the lot to feed Hee-Haw and to open the doors so the chickens and geese could come out.

Without saying anything to him about it, Mrs. Man had decided last night to spread a sheet over the cans and buckets of syrup, and when Mr. Man saw the sheet he went over and raised up one side of it, just for no reason at all, for he knew that the syrup was under there; but he happened to lift it right at the place where Jocko had taken the two big buckets, and left such a wide gap in the row. When he saw that gap he jerked the sheet off to see if it was all gone, but it wasn't; none but the two big buckets were missing. And now for tracks. Yes, there they were, those "curious animal" tracks,

"So that's what the noise was all about last night," said Mr. Man. "Some more circus folks stuff. A circus man was a trained owl that squalls like somebody was killing him, and throws poison all over a dog that runs after him. What on earth is a man to do with such people and things?"

"One thing that they might do," said Mrs. Man, "is to get up and get their guns and go out and shoot some robbers when their wives call them at night."

WASHINGTON: WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1934

John Purcell, Treasurer of Virginia, Dies

Entered State's Employ in Youth; Named to Office by Trinkle.

Gov. Peery Praises Work That Averted Loss of Funds in Crisis.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 16 (AP).—John M. Purcell, State treasurer, under whose guidance Virginia passed through the depression without losing a dollar of invested funds or money deposited in banks, died today.

Mr. Purcell, aged 52, had been in ill health for some time, but was confined to his home only a few hours before his death, which was unexpected by his associates.

Praised during his lefetime by the Governors under whom he served and the auditors who examined his accounts, Mr. Purcell's death drew from Gov. Peery today the comment that "he devoted practically the whole of his life to the service of the State. He proved himself in every way to be a faithful officer and an efficient public servant."

Peery Grieved by Death.

"I am deeply grieved to hear of his death," the Governor said, recalling that a recent audit of the department "was a splendid tribute to him. It showed the State had not lost a dollar in any of the many bank failures of the recent crisis. John M. Purcell was an excellent public officer and a splendid citizen of the State."

State Auditor L. McCarthy Downs added: "Virginia has lost an officer who was highly efficient in the performance of his duties and one who directed State finances through recent trying years in such a manner that not a single department lost a penny during the banking crisis when banks were closing and securities were falling."

Entering the State service in the treasurer's office at the age of 17 he steadily worked his way to the top.

Wins Despite Klan Vote.

He was first appointed to the State treasurer's office by Gov. Trinkle in 1924 as a successor to Charles A. Johnson. Running for the office in the election of 1925, the fact that he was a member of the Catholic Church was used by the then well-organized Ku Klux Klan in an effort to defeat him, but he won by a majority of more than 19,000 votes. After the short ballot had done away with the election of State treasurers he was reappointed to the office by Gov. Pollard and again in January of this year by Gov. Peery.

In addition to studies in connection with the duties of his office, Mr. Purcell took a course in law and was admitted to the State bar in 1919. His political services included the chairmanship of the Richmond City democratic committee for nearly ten years and a membership on the State Democratic committee for a similar period.

Surviving Mr. Purcell are his wife, Mrs. Alice Griffith Purcell; four sons, John M., jr., William Griffith, James Edward and Joseph Edward; four brothers and a sister, all residents of Richmond.

Byrd and Pollard Offer High Tribute to Purcell

Two former Governors of Virginia expressed grief yesterday when advised of the death of State Treasurer John Purcell, according to the Associated Press.

Senator Harry F. Byrd and Chairman John Garland Pollard, of the Veterans' Appeal Board, both of whom had Purcell in their cabinet while chief executives of Virginia, made statements expressing regret.

"I am deeply grieved," Senator Byrd said, "to learn of the death of my dear friend John Purcell. He was one of the most efficient and trustworthy officials Virginia ever had. He was a man of the highest character and possessed very high ideals of integrity. He will be sorely missed by his friends in the government of Virginia and in private life."

Mr. Pollard said:

"John Purcell was a faithful and efficient officer. He was ever watchful of the public interest. Though modest and retiring, those who knew him well recognized his ability. He was a man of few words but of deep emotions. He was my loyal friend and I shall miss him."

Girl Auto Victim Is Given Burial

Harrisonburg, Va., Oct. 16 (Spl.). Funeral services for Miss Mary Frances Shifflett, 17, who died at Rockingham Memorial Hospital from injuries suffered in jumping off the running board of an automobile, were held this morning from the Rocky Bar Episcopal Church in East Rockingham.

Russell Gooden, 16, told officers he picked up the girl to give her "a lift" until she caught up with three girls walking. When the car approached the trio on the road, Miss Shifflett jumped before Gooden stopped the car. Her head struck the road and she suffered a fractured skull. The girls were en route to McGaheysville to collect their pay from a cannery for picking beans.

Gooden is held on technical charges of driving a car without an operator's permit and with permitting a person to ride on the running board in violation of State traffic laws.

Ritchie to Act As a Pallbearer At Digges Rites

Funeral of Maryland Jurist Scheduled Thursday at La Plata.

By a Staff Correspondent.

La Plata, Md., Oct. 16.—Gov. Albert C. Ritchie will be one of the honorary pallbearers Thursday at the funeral of Chief Judge W. Mitchell Digges of the Seventh Maryland Judicial District, president of the Maryland Bar Association.

The services will be held at Christ Church, La Plata, home of the noted Maryland judge and Court of Appeals justice. The Rev. Harry Howe Bobert, rector, will officiate. Interment will be in Mount Rest Cemetery.

Active pallbearers will be his cousins, H. Maxwell Mitchell, Walter J. Mitchell, jr., James C. Mitchell, John H. Mitchell, F. Lewis Mitchell and McLean Cruikshank, all of La Plata.

Besides Gov. Ritchie, the honorary pallbearers will consist of the members of the Maryland Court of Appeals, of which Judge Digges was a member; the two associate judges of the Seventh Judicial Circuit, Judges Joseph C. Mattingly and William Loker, and the clerks of court of the four counties of the local judicial circuit.

Judge Digges, who, last June, was elected president of the Maryland Bar Association, died late Monday night at his La Plata home. His family was at his bedside.

He had been ill for several weeks. Last spring he had been confined to Bon Secours Hospital, Baltimore, with heart trouble and never completely rallied. Dr. C. C. Marbury, of Washington, and Dr. George Steward, of Baltimore, were attending him.

Judge Digges was born near La Plata February 17, 1877, a son of John Thomas and Catherine Mitchell. He received his early education at Charlotte Hall Military Academy. He attended the Maryland Agricultural College, now the University of Maryland, from 1891 through 1893.

He was graduated from Maryland University's law school in 1902 and was admitted to the bar that same year. Judge Digges began his practice in La Plata. In 1909 he was married to Miss Mary Natalie Jenkins, of that town.

Named Port Official.

A member of the Maryland House of Delegates from 1910 through 1912, he was appointed the next year, by President Wilson, as an official of the Port of Baltimore. This he held until 1921.

He was active in the St. Andrews Chapter of the Sons of the American Revolution, was past master of the St. Columbus Masonic Lodge, and was president of the Charles County Bank and Eastern Shore Trust Co., from 1908 to 1923.

The following statement was issued late yesterday by Judge Joseph C. Mattingly of the Prince Georges County Circuit Court:

"During the session of court held at Upper Marlboro, October 6, 1934, after announcement by T. Van Clagett, president of the county Bar Association, of the death of Chief Judge W. Mitchell Digges, the court adjourned today as a mark of respect to the memory of Judge Digges.

"The court announced at the time that adjournment will be had for the funeral and the court and bar association will attend the services in a body."

Judge Digges is survived by his widow, one daughter and three sons. The daughter, Miss Eleanor Jenkins Digges, is a resident of La Plata. John Dudley Digges is a student at the University of Maryland Law School, Baltimore; Walter Mitchell Digges lives at La Plata, and Edward Simms Digges, the third son, is a senior at McDonogh Military School, Baltimore.

Appellate Court Adjourns.

Annapolis, Md., Oct. 16 (Spl.).—Out of respect to one of its members, Judge W. Mitchell Digges, chief judge of the seventh judicial circuit, who died last night at his home in LaPlata, the Maryland Court of Appeals today adjourned until next Tuesday and the jurists planned to attend the funeral to be held Thursday morning.

A member of the appellate court a number of years, Judge Digges had many friends in Annapolis, prominent in the legal fraternity of the State. He also took an active part in Democratic political affairs in his home county before going on the bench, and was a close associate of Walter J. Mitchell, president of the Maryland Senate, and party leader in Charles County.

Rock Creek-Sligo Work to Employ 250 for Four Months.

Allotments of loans and grants approved yesterday by Public Works Administrator Harold L. Ickes favored several Maryland counties as $2,838,700 was distributed for 31 non-Federal projects throughout the country.

Included in the list of projects approved for Maryland were:

A loan and grant for $173,000 to Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission for construction of approximately 5.2 miles of concrete roads, including necessary grading and draining in five locations in Rock Creek Park and Sligo Creek Parkway. Construction is estimated to require 4 months and give employment to an average of 250 men for that length of time. The entire cost of the project is approximately $179,920, and the difference between the total cost and the PWA allotment will be furnished by the applicant from other revenues.

A second loan and grant to Montgomery County is for $20,000 to Conduit Road Fire Board, Inc., Glen Echo, for construction of a two-story fire house and community hall building. The approximate cost of labor and material is $18,700, of which 30 per cent is a grant.

Chestertown—A loan and grant for the sum of $44,000 to the town of Chestertown, for construction of an intercepting sewer, pumping station, force main and treatment plant. Construction is estimated to require 6 months and give 50 men employment for that period of time.

Baltimore County—A grant not to exceed $48,000 to the Board of Education of Baltimore County to aid in the construction of a 3-story addition to the Catonsville Elementary School and a 2-story addition to the Sparrows Point High School. Construction is estimated to require seven months and give employment to an average of 100 men for that length of time.

Catonsville—A grant not to exceed $39,500 to Maryland to aid in the construction of a 2-story fireproof building for recreation and occupational therapy, and additions to existing dining-room and ward building at the Spring Grove State Hospital. Construction is estimated to require ten months and give employment to 48 men for that length of time.

Federalsburg—A loan and grant for $38,000 to the City of Federalsburg for the extension to the existing sewer system, construction of outfall sewers and a sewage disposal plant. Construction is estimated to require nine months and give 30 men employment during that period of time.

Va. Raps Rum Law Violation by Hotel

Control Board Asks War Officials Halt Sale.

Richmond, Oct. 16 (AP).—The Virginia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board today followed up the recent report of its legal adviser with an informal request that the State attorney general's office ask the War Department to prevent violation of the State liquor laws by the Chamberlain Hotel at Old Point.

G. Stanley Clarke, assistant attorney general assigned to the board, had reported his opinion that an appeal to the War Department was the best way to solve the problem arising from the hotel's defiance of the board's ruling that it could not sell hard liquors. The hotel claimed its location on a Government reservation put it outside the State police authority.

In asking the attorney general to take action the board said it felt it would be criticized severely as long as the State laws are disregarded on this or other Army reservations.

Along the Tri-State Trail

Good news for pie eaters: George Wolfe and his brother, John, of Quiet Dell, W. Va., have grown three tons of pumpkins on a quarter-acre of ground. One of the pumpkins weighs 85 pounds, and the entire neighborhood is reported speculating on the number of pies that can be made from that particular pumpkin.

Regardless of whether one is a prohibitionist or an antiprohibitionist, news from Virginia yesterday could be made to substantiate their argument. At Richmond, the Virginia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board was reported making money in the liquor business; at Roanoke the Woman's Christian Temperance Union reiterated its demand for temperance, with the added thought that the presence of abuses of the legalized liquor traffic make accomplishment of their ideals a bit easier.

There still are some people who think false fire alarms are a good joke. Two men have been fined for this pseudo fun-making at Hagerstown, Md.

Fishermen at Leonardtown, Md., report that fishing in the waters of St. Mary's County is the best in years. Sportsmen report catching rock averaging 10 pounds and large bluefish, the latter especially, at the mouth of the Wicomico River. Plenty of time to annex a good fish story this season, it seems.

If farmers who have agreed to feed cattle from the drought-stricken Middle West for the Federal Government are not careful, they will do so at a loss—at least that is the opinion of Lloyd Kendall, one of 24 Washington County (Md.) men who accepted steers for feeding.

Kendall says he found the steers much wilder than domestic cattle and that as a result of the wildness of one of them he is suffering from several dislocated ribs. Doctor's bills, Kendall is afraid, may be more than the remuneration for feeding the animals.

Harrisonburg, Va., had an unusual occurrence this week. While many jails are easy for archcriminals to escape from while awaiting execution or the serving of sentence, the Rockingham County Jail locks worked so well that it was impossible to free a prisoner after his term had expired. Unable to open the lock, Jailer Everett Martin called for a lock expert while the prisoner served an 'extra day.' After an electric drill had been used on the lock's mechanism, the door was opened and the prisoner eventually freed.

Jailer Martin is now said to be wondering if other jailers would like to know the secret of the "keep-in" art.

Illness Fatal To Col. G. M. Lee

Baltimore, Oct. 16 (AP).—Lieut. Col. George M. Lee, U. S. A. (retired), died at his home here last night. His death was attributed to heart disease. He was 57 years old.

Col. Lee was the son of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, of Virginia, the great-nephew of Gen. Robert E. Lee, and the great-grandson of Gen. Harry Lee, the "Light-horse Harry" of Revolutionary fame. He was a West Pointer.

Col. Lee is survived by his widow, a son, Lieut. Fitzhugh Lee, U. S. N., and a daughter, Mrs. Lee DeWolfe, of Washington.

Judges Named to Try Page on Bar Charges

Charlottesville, Va., Oct. 16 (AP).—Judge Lemuel F. Smith, of Charlottesville; Judge Aubrey E. Strode, of Lynchburg, and Judge Frank T. Sutton, of Richmond, have been designated by Chief Justice Preston W. Campbell, of the State Supreme Court, to hear disbarment proceedings against James C. Page, Richmond attorney, accused of malpractice and unprofessional conduct.

Mother of Mais Denied Visitors

Her Daughter Barred From Richmond Jail by Order of Judge.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 16 (AP).—A daughter of Mrs. Elizabeth Mais, mother of Gangster Robert Mais, who with Walter Legenza, escaped from their death cell in the city jail, today was refused admission to the jail, where she sought to see her mother.

The daughter, Mrs. Nichols, arrived from Philadelphia, bringing her 6-month-old son in her arms, as the grand jury entered the fourth day of its investigation into the spectacular jail break.

Her request was denied by Judge John L. Ingram. No visitor has been permitted to see Mrs. Mais since she was removed from the Second Precinct Station, where she was held as a "voluntary" prisoner, to the hospital ward at the city jail two weeks ago. She is charged with smuggling pistols to Mais and Legenza.

Temperance Fight Pledged

Eighteenth Amendment, Picked to Pieces, Better Dead Than Alive, Mrs. Amy C. Weech Tells Virginia W. C. T. U.

Roanoke, Va., Oct. 16 (AP).—Pledging themselves to a continuation of the fight for temperance "as long as there is breath in our bodies," delegates to the fifty-second annual convention of the Virginia Woman's Temperance Union concluded their four-day meeting with a banquet at Calvary Baptist Church last night.

The banquet followed a day's program crowded with business and which included the reelection of Mrs. Howard M. Hoge, of Lincoln, as president of the organization for the thirty-sixth time. Other officers also were reelected for new terms.

"Let us cast out of our minds regret at the passing of the eighteenth amendment, for it was so picked to pieces that it perhaps is better dead than alive," said Mrs. Amy C. Weech, of Washington, who was among the banquet speakers.

Mrs. Weech declared that the wets in Virginia found a great deal more "dry" sentiment than they had anticipated, as reflected in the recent vote in Bristol.

Mrs. Lem Gilreath, of Charlotte, N. C., evangelist, likewise declared the "liquor interests in Virginia" are perturbed and asserted further that the W. C. T. U. had the opportunity of closing again the door on the "evil" that "threatens our children."

It's No Joke

Rubber Money Sellers Face Fine or Jail.

Baltimore, Oct. 16 (AP).—Rubber money—the kind that really stretches and really is made of rubber—is definitely taboo in the future, Federal agents said here today.

Merchants all over Maryland have been selling the "trick money" to practical jokesters. In the past, agents simply have confiscated the sheets of thin rubber money.

In the future, however, the agents said, merchants selling such trick currency will be arrested and will face a fine of $5,000 or imprisonment of 15 years—or both. Convictions for counterfeiting have been obtained in other States on such charges, the agents stated.

Almost 15 pounds of the money have been confiscated in Baltimore recently, he said.

1,000 Guardsmen Called Out for Roosevelt's Roanoke Visit.

Roanoke, Va., Oct. 16 (Spl.).—Roanoke has made elaborate plans for the visit of President Roosevelt Friday to dedicate the 16-unit veterans' hospital, and for the entertainment of Postmaster General James A. Farley at a banquet Friday night. Mr. Farley will speak in the Roanoke auditorium at 8 p. m.

Mr. Roosevelt's visit will be the first official one ever paid to Roanoke by a President of the United States. After leaving his train at 3:30 p. m. he will proceed 12 miles before reaching the hospital, motoring first through the business district of Roanoke and thence to Salem, returning to the hospital about half way between Salem and Roanoke.

One thousand National Guardsmen will serve as military police to control traffic. The V. P. I. band and an honor guard from V. M. I. will participate.

Mr. Farley's speech is expected to be a defense of Administration policies. It will be made in the heart of the constituency of Representative C. A. Woodrum, New Deal supporter, who is seeking reelection.

Aircraft Banned at Scene.

The Commerce Department issued orders yesterday prohibiting aircraft from nearing the scene of the veterans' hospital dedication at Roanoke, according to the Associated Press.

A rule, issued over the signature of Assistant Secretary Mitchell, said that between 4 p. m. and 5:30 p. m. on that date "all aircraft are prohibited from flights within one-half mile in all directions of the area * * * during the dedication ceremony."

The area was described as a point midway between Roanoke and Salem on the north bank of the Roanoke River and near the main line of the Norfolk & Western Railway.

Women Hear Broome Talk On Education

League of Voters Opens Two-Day Convention at Baltimore.

McCurdy and Miss Tall Are Other Speakers at Meeting.

Sylvester, director of vocational guidance in the Baltimore schools, and Miss Persis K. Miller, school principal here.

Other speakers at the morning session included Joseph P. McCurdy, president of the Maryland and District of Columbia Federation of Labor, and Dr. J. Knox Insley, of the State Department of Labor and Statistics.

Trial Set Nov. 12 In Calhoun Slaying

Berry's attorneys, State Senator Aubrey G. Weaver and Charles Winfield, announced yesterday that they will claim self-defense.

A witness to the shooting, Miss Arlene Lam, told officers that Berry was in the automobile from which the fatal shot was fired.

Katharine Cornell Plans to Bring New Treatment of Shakespeare to Theater

Jo Mielziner Is Shifting Period Of Classic Play

Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Katharine Cornell, who boasts a well substantiated claim to the title of "first lady of the American theater," has divided her late summer and early fall holiday among points of restful interest in Mallorca, Bavaria and Italy and now is in Verona, the legendary scene of the tragedy of Romeo and Juliet.

Her proposed visit to Norway, one learns from the helpful Mr. Ray Henderson, has been postponed because she has deferred her production of Henrik Ibsen's tragic and somewhat abtruse drama of "Rosmersholm."

Miss Cornell will sail from Italy on the S. S. Rex, November 1, arriving in New York November 8 to begin rehearsals of "Romeo and Juliet," under the direction of Guthrie McClintic.

The actress-manager—and she is one of the very few we have in the native theater—will open her season in the Hanna Theater in Cleveland, Ohio, in "Romeo and Juliet" on November 29, after which she will appear in Detroit and Pittsburgh bepear in Detroit and Pittsburgh before beginning her New York engagement in the Martin Beck Theater on Thursday night, December 20.

Is This Superstition?

It was in the Hanna Theater, it will be recalled, that Miss Cornell initiated the tremendously successful career of Rudolph Besier's play of "The Barretts of Wimpole Street." One suspects that there may be a sort of superstitious favoritism for this playhouse in the mind and heart of this gifted star.

Incidentally, an entirely new setting for "Romeo and Juliet" is being made by Jo Mielziner. His settings are designed in the Italian primitive style after the school of Giotto, thus departing more or less from the traditional custom of employing the Italian Renaissance or Elizabethan period in the staging of the classic love tragedy.

By going back to the pre-Renaissance era, Mielziner, who is by way of being a brother of Kenneth MacKenna, stage and screen actor and former husband of Kay Francis, hopes to bring a gayer, more colorful pictorial note to the background of the play.

His First of the Bard's.

Although this will be his eighty-fifth production in the theater, "Romeo and Juliet" is the first Shakespearean drama for which he has designed the scenery and costumes.

Last season some regret was expressed here that Miss Cornell did not see fit to permit Washington the opportunity to estimate the comparative values of her intrepretation of "Romeo and Juliet" and Eva Le Gallienne's. Now that she is exercising a further degree of revolutionary artistry in her staging of the play, it is more than ever to be regretted that the National Capital seems to be a remote consideration on her route sheets.

Alan J. Bachrach, formerly assistant manager of the Ambassador Theater, has been appointed manager of Warner Brothers Home Theater, Thirteenth and C streets northeast. Announcement of Mr. Bachrach's promotion was made over the week-end by Zone Manager John J. Payette of Warners.

Maxine Is "Back Home."

Elsewhere on this page appears the smiling likeness of a charming young woman who, during a period of three years of professional activity in this city, made a host of friends who have rejoiced in the speed with which she has reached at least the modest heights in Hollywood, where she now is a contract player on the roster of the Warner Brothers' representative and highly capable stock company.

They have done something to her voice during the year she has been in the studios of the West Coast, because when Maxine Doyle called up yesterday, shortly after having arrived in the Capital in the seemingly record time of 23½ hours, or something of the sort, by plane, her voice was as foreign to me as if I never had heard it—and I have heard it a time or two oftener than that!

Spirit Is Still Gay.

But back of the slightly more treble vocal organ was the same ebullient personality and gayety of spirit that Earle audiences learned to love. Maxine, naturally, is elated at the turn of events in her professional career. I imagine she still pinches herself now and again to make sure that she is actually awake and not merely enjoying some gorgeous dream.

Her personal appearances will be limited to the week at the Earle. She feels that as a beginner she may not be quite ready for a triumphant National tour away from her own "home folks." Next year, perhaps.

After the Washington week, another week of playgoing in New York and then another long plane ride back to the Weast Coast and the grinding cameras.

Today at 12:30 Miss Derle is being feted by the Warner executives in the handsome parlors of the Variety Club in the Willard Hotel. Presumably there will be more of that here a little later.

And in case you thought that was Amos 'n' Andy you saw at the radio hearing yesterday, your guess was as right as rain. Freeman Gosden and Charles Correll, like Miss Doyle, arrived in Washington long in advance of their prospective week of personal appearances at Loew's Fox, beginning Friday. You'll be seeing them around, but not in burnt cork, so maybe you wouldn't know.

"Backward, Turn Backward——"

At the soiree tossed in the general direction of George Sidney, Ed Lowry and practically all the other artists on the current stage bill at Loew's Fox, backstage last Saturday night, it seemed a matter of some surprise to the guest of honor that any one should be present who could recall his performances with Ward and Vokes in such of their old-time hits as "The and Vokes and their wives, Lucy Daly and Margaret Daly Vokes, Headwaiters" and "The Floorwalkers."

Unique Entertainments.

Those musical fol-de-rols, as a matter of fact, do date back to about the time of the Indian Wars, when George Sidney was doing

At that time in addition to Ward with Hap Ward and Harry Vokes the identical sort of low-comedy Yiddish impersonations David Warfield was contributing to the burlesques of Joe Weber and Lew Fields in their old Twenty-ninth Street Music Hall in New York. George Sidney and a considerable cast of other headliners of their day made the Ward & Vokes entertainments utterly distinctive and among the most popular light musical offerings known to the boards.

It was after this salutary launching of his career as a young comedian that George, now a trifle over the half-century mark, came along to score in such later vehicles as "Busy Izzy," "Welcome Stranger," "Potash and Perlmutter" and the others familiar to the present generation of stage and picture fans.

The only other player at the party who could offer a close approach to Mr. Sidney as a veteran trouper was Herb Williams, who also has been around a while. Herb was on his way to New York for a Sabbath at home, prior to the opening of "The Farmer Takes a Wife," in Philadelphia last night. His daughter, formerly associated with him in his familiar piano act, is now playing with her mother, the former Mrs. Williams, known to the stage as Hilda Wolfus.

The Fabulous Young "Grick."

And that extraordinary young comedienne of the present week's stage bill at the Fox, Elaine Arden by name, is the creator of a brand of unique comedy that easily entitles her to be known as the "female George Givot"—or perhaps George should be known as the "male Elaine Arden."

Both are "Grick" comics of the first water. Miss Arden's bizarre physical antics, one learns by a discreet process of circumlocution, are made possible by the fact that she is what is commonly known as "double jointed." Her orthopedic articulations, in other words, are approximately as loose as ashes! Her comedy methods, however, are air-tight.

Along about 1:30 a. m., Division Manager Carter Barron heard that he was throwing a party for Mr. Sidney, so stopped in on his way home from Durham. It was quite worth it, what with the hot dogs and all!

Opportunity of Lifetime Note.

Beginning tomorrow morning at 9, backstage at Loew's Fox, Eleanor Powell, who lifts them up and puts them down better than anyone else of her gender, with the possible exception of Ruby Keeler and Mitzi Mayfair, will give free instruction in tap dancing to all who present themselves and bring their pedals with them.

Maxine Doyle, former mistress of ceremonies at the Earle Theater and now a contract screen player for the Warner Brothers, snapped as she arrived in Washington by plane yesterday morning for a week of personal appearances at the Earle, beginning Friday. Miss Doyle will be seen in conjunction with "Six Day Bike Rider," the new picture in which she plays opposite Joe E. Brown. She is renewing a host of old acquaintanceships in the interval preceding Friday's opening and is radiantly happy to be "back home."

Funeral services for Mrs. Mary E. St. Clair, wife of Dr. Francis St. Clair, 1458 Clifton street, and past District State regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution, will be held at 1 p. m. today at the S. H. Hines chapel, 2901 Fourteenth street. Burial will be in Oak Hill Cemetery.

Mrs. St. Clair, who died Sunday at Emergency Hospital after a brief illness, was well known in club and fraternal circles.

She once was national vice president of the Society of Daughters of Founders and Patriots of America, and president of the District Chapter. She had been president of the Society of 1812, regent of Emily Nelson Chapter of the D. A. R., and president of the Chapin Union of the W. C. T. U. A charter member of the Society of Natives of the District of Columbia, she also belonged to the Society of American Colonists, the P. E. O. Society and the Huguenot Society.

Struck by Auto, Girl, 7, Injured

Trapped in the path of an automobile as she ran from behind a bus which had brought her home from school, Ruth Foster, 7, daughter of Cleveland L. Foster, an employe on the Thomas M. Anderson Farm, 1 mile north of Rockville on the Frederick road, was injured critically late yesterday.

At Montgomery County General Hospital physicians said the child suffered fractures of both legs and possible internal injuries. They described her condition as grave.

Miss Jones was returning from the funeral of Andrew Redmon, who was killed in an automobile accident near the same spot last Saturday.

In her car as passengers were Redmon's widow, Mrs. Lottie Redmon, and his brother, Joseph Redmon.

To the character, the unfailing integrity and the versatile artistry of one of the most beloved figures in the American theater was paid the tribute of a salvo of applause that may not be equaled again this season.

Through the tumult came occasional calls of "author, author," but that was a matter of purely minor consequence. The authors didn't much matter last evening.

Fred Stone, who in his own words, in a brief and happy curtain speech, has run the gamut of theatrical endeavor from circus through minstrelsy, vaudeville and musical comedy to his present serious vehicle, and the youngest of his three charming daughters, Carol, were stars in fact, as well as name, of the National's most notable first night of the new season.

The Play Lacks Power.

The dramatic fiber of "Jayhawker" lacks something less substantial than had been hoped by many who have followed the course of the drama's way to the stage. The first act gave promise of a penetrating analysis of the part of the jingo politician in the horrendous days of the War Between the States that its subsequent disclosures failed utterly to encompass.

The Messrs. Sinclair Lewis and Lloyd Lewis have contrived a study of devious prpcedures in a crucial period in the Nation's history that are seriously interrupted and largely vitiated by the obtrusion of a "glory hole" scene in what would have been "no man's land," if that term had been thought of as far back as 1861, that is hopelessly deficient in such qualities as made a similar scene in "The Littlest Rebel," for example, evidence that Edward Peple had a definite and convincing notion of what "trench warfare" was like in the days of Bull Run, The Wilderness and Shiloh.

Able Character Study.

As a character study of a political "power" in whose creed expediency was the dominating factor, "Jayhawker" for two acts of its three is an amusing, a cogent and at times a thrilling work. Into the part of Asa (Ace) Burdette, impersonated with a rare and infallible sense of the comic, the dramatic and the melodramatic by the star, the authors have poured a vast amount of psychological quirks with which to harass their actor.

The first-act camp-meeting scene of Fred Stone's is the longest and most exhausting single oration that has been written into a part since Robert Hichens fashioned the second act of his "Garden of Allah," in which Lawson Butts harangued at interminable length in the role of the renegade monk who succumbed so understandably to the wiles of Mary Mannering.

Do Yeomans' Service.

Mr. Stone, however, is not alone in expertness of his efforts to redeem a mediocre piece of playwriting. His daughter, Carol, is a lovely and entirely competent bulwark to the romantic movements of the narrative, and that eminent exponent of all that is fine in accurate and true character delineation, Walter C. Kelly, the erstwhile "Virginia Judge," makes a dependably authentic and colorful Gen. Philemon Smallwood, a rascal no less to be condemned in his political machinations than his bogus confrere, Mr. Burdette.

Paul Guilfoyle, as Will Starling, the superlatively conscientious young soldier whose obsessions lend themselves nicely to the pointing of the dramatic climaxes of the play; Edward McNamara, who does a priceless bit as the corrective sergeant who knows all the answers to many difficult problems, and Ralph Theadore as the Rev. Peavie, render support that is rather above the grade of the play's otherwise average performance.

As a document casting an illuminating and revelatory light upon the circumstances surrounding the conduct of the Civil War, "Jayhawker" is something less than might have been expected from such distinguished authorship. As a very definite exposition of the splendid abilities of Fred and Carol Stone it is a work of first importance.

Hollywood, Oct. 15.—"Midsummer Night's Dream" must be the good luck production of the century. Most of the younger players are progressing in pictures following their appearance in the Reinhardt production. William Henry was given an important role in "Wicked Woman," and Robert Livingston, who succeeded him as Lysander, now is to become the football hero in "Backfield," with Robert Young. The role has potentialities of brightening Livingston's fame considerably. This young player is called a graduate of the M. G. M. school of the theater, and was also a Pasadena Community Playhouse actor.

Unusual Roles For Love.

Montagu Love will be busy playing governors in "Clive of India." He is to enact two of them in the picture, and the assignment is quite contrary to his own anticipations. Love, after finishing playing in "Limehouse Nights," had left Hollywood to go into a stage play in New York, but was called back before he could reach (by motor) his destination.

Loyal to France But Will Return.

Ketti Gallian is to remain faithful to her native land and language for a picture. She sailed yesterday from New York for France, and while in that country will appear in a French film made by Fox. "Marie Galante," which stars Miss Gallian, will be released in the near future, and she will probably return toward the end of the year for another American picture. Much, of course, depends on the impression that she makes in her first Hollywood feature.

Back in Harness Without Delay.

William Gargan didn't have to wait any time at all for his first job, following his return from Enginad, where he made a picture called "School Days," with Cicely Courtneidge.

He is to enact the head of the police department in the Paul Muni picture, "Black Hell," a story of the coal mines, which is to start in about two weeks.

Picture Pageant In Review.

Randolph Scott has a new picture to do, and has simultaneously had his contract at Paramount renewed. The new film will be "The Vanishing Pioneers," by Zane Grey, which Charles Barton will direct. Scott has just completed a production called "Code of the West."

Alison Skipworth joins the cast of "Caprice Espagnole," the Marlene Dietrich film, in which Joel McCrea, Lionel Atwill and Edward Everett Horton are other principals.

John Buckler, under contract to Columbia, has been borrowed by M.G.M. to play Ham Peggotty in "David Copperfield." The role is that of Lionel Barrymore's son.

Title of "Broken Soil," the Anna Sten-Gary Cooper picture, has been changed to "The Wedding Night." This has its setting in the Connecticut farm district, and will be directed by King Vidor.

Mrs. Gloria Vanderbilt Leads Royal Entourage to Court

But News in Feud Over Child's Custody Fails to Leak Out.

New York, Oct. 16 (AP).—Mrs. Morgan Gloria Vanderbilt went to court today to fight for her heiress daughter with a list of supporting witnesses that read like a page from the Almanach de Gotha, the Who's Who of royalty.

But the public heard no word of the Vanderbilt feud over custody of 10-year-old Gloria Vanderbilt, Justice John F. Carew barring public and press alike and abandoning a judicial resume after each session.

In the back door of the courtroom came Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, garbed in black. She charges Mrs. Vanderbilt with being an unfit mother for Gloria.

Royal Entourage Appears.

In the front way, cheerfully meeting the curious, came Mrs. Vanderbilt and her royal entourage which crossed the Atlantic to appear in her defense.

There was Prince Gottfried zu Hohenlohe-Langenburg, once the fiance of Mrs. Vanderbilt, and his wife, the former Princess Margareta of Greece. They were in bubbling spirits but had no statements to make.

Co-Guardian Examined.

Nathan Burkan, Mrs. Vanderbilt's attorney, devoted the time until noon recess to cross-examination of Thomas B. Gilchrist, who with George W. Wickersham is co-guardian of the $3,000,000 estate of little Gloria.

It was gathered that Gilchrist spent his time identifying various documents concerning the estate and answering questions pertaining to them.

J. Dean Voted National's Best Man

Scores 78 Points on Most Valuable Ballot, 28 Above P. Waner.

CHICAGO, Oct. 16 (AP).—Jerome Herman Dean, dizzy making $35,000 for himself this year, was named tonight as the most valuable player in the National League for 1934.

Pitching ace of the world's champions, St. Louis Cardinals, Dean came within two points of a perfect score in the selection made by a committee of eight representing the Baseball Writers Association of America. In the official balloting, first place counted 10 points, and Dean scored 78 points. Six members of the committee voted him the most valuable player and the other two ranked him second.

P. Dean Is Tenth.

So pitcher succeeds pitcher in the most valuable player award. The honor was awarded to Carl Hubbell of the New York Giants last year. Hubbell this year finished in a three-way tie for ninth place, along with Paul Dean, Dizzy's brother, and Hal Schumacher, another Giant.

The victory of the valiant Dizzy was clear cut and decisive. He had a margin of 28 points over Paul Waner, of the Pittsburgh Pirates, who finished second, and of 36 points over Joe Moore of the New York Giants, in third place. Travis Jackson, Giants' inspiring infielder, landed in fourth place, with Melvin Ott, also of the Giants, fifth.

Twenty five players were given points in the balloting. Twenty players were included in the honorable mention.

His Season's History.

Won 30 games and lost 7 for the Cardinals, for the best National League pitching since 1915, when Grover Cleveland Alexander, the Wheelhorse of the Phillies, also was victorious in 30 encounters.

Led the National League for the third consecutive year in strike outs, whiffing 198 batsmen, according to unofficial figures.

Was within a couple of innings of working more than any other pitcher in the league, pitching 311 innings to 313 for Hubbell and 314 for Van Lingle Mungo, the Brooklyn speedball artist.

Those selected in previous years were: 1924—Dazzy Vance, Brooklyn; 1925—Rogers Hornsby, St. Louis; 1926—Bob O'Farrell, St. Louis; 1927—Paul Waner, Pittsburgh; 1928—James Bottomley, St. Louis; 1929—Rogers Hornsby, St. Louis; 1930—Hack Wilson, Chicago; 1931—Frank Frisch, St. Louis; 1932—Chuck Klein, Philadelphia; 1933 — Carl Hubbell, New York; 1934—Dizzy Dean, St. Louis.

Champion Teams To Stage Play-Off

County Clubs to Settle Flag Race Sunday.

Hagerstown, Md., Oct. 16 (Spl.).—Another game will be necessary to decide the Washington County semipro baseball title. It will be played this Sunday between the Antietam nine of Hagerstown and the Hancock team.

Hancock tied up the series, 2-all, by virtue of a 6-to-6 victory in 13 innings, and the seven-inning game following, which it was hoped would result in deciding the title, resulted in a 1-to-1 tie. Hinkle worked the entire 20 innings for Hancock and apparently improved the further he went. A. French won the first game by stealing home.

Crisler Favors More Field Goals

Princeton Coach Would Widen Posts, Lower Bars.

Princeton, N. J., Oct. 16 (AP).—H. O. (Fritz) Crisler, head football coach at Princeton University, is in favor of more and better field goals. He would widen the goal posts and lower the cross bar but still leave the posts ten yards back of the goal line.

If that did not produce a field-goal revival, he would increase the value to more than the present 3 points. Crisler told some 50 sports writers yesterday he planned to submit the changes to the rules committee this winter.

Michigan State Shifts Tactics for Manhattan

East Lansing, Mich., Oct. 16 (AP).—Seeking to keep Michigan State's football team in the ranks of undefeated elevens, Coach Charley Bachman today set about changing the Spartan defense tactics to meet the double and single wing back formation of Manhattan College at Brooklyn Saturday.

Grid Strike

Texas High School Players Demand Fair Treatment.

HOUSTON, Tex., Oct. 16 (AP). Settlement of a "strike" by the Jeff Davis High School football squad, voted by the players until they "received better treatment from the Houston High School athletic body" was believed near today when Coach Roy Needham called practice for this afternoon.

Eight boys, six of them Jeff Davis players, "crashed the gate" at the Sam Houston-North Dallas high game Saturday night and were arrested and placed in jail on charges of disturbing the peace and using abusive language. The charges later were dismissed.

The players asked that they be permitted to view games of other Houston high schools free of charge and that hospital and doctor bills be paid for those who have been hurt this season and those who may be injured in the future.

Earl Mack Hits Belief Foxx May Quit

PORTLAND, Oreg., Oct. 16 (AP). The fear that a head injury might end the brilliant baseball career of Jimmie Foxx was called "bunk" tonight by Earl Mack, business manager of the barnstorming American League all-star team.

"It's all bunk," declared Mack. "Foxx is all right. He'll be playing in a few days."

A little more than a week ago Foxx was hit in the head by a pitched ball in an exhibition game at Winnipeg.

While he still is kept on the sidelines, the show goes on, with Foxx making public appearances and the fans having a chance to look at Connie Mack's highest salaried player.

Rest Is Needed.

Foxx said today all he needed was a little rest. He predicted he would be ready to play again when the team reached Japan, first stop in the team's Oriental tour. The team sails from Seattle October 20.

Mack declared Foxx could play now if necessary, but it was considered best to let him rest a few days.

At Winnipeg today Foxx's physician, Dr. William Rogers, expressed surprise on hearing the reports from Seattle. He declared Foxx was in good condition when he left Winnipeg.

An examination showed he suffered from mild concussion but had no fracture, although apparently there was a small break at the top of the skull, which he received six years ago.

Terry Denies Hubbell Is For Sale

Spikes Rumor That Pitching Ace May Be Traded to Cards.

MEMPHIS, TENN., Oct. 16 (AP). Manager Bill Terry, of the New York Giants, let it be known here today that he hasn't offered Carl Hubbell to the St. Louis Cardinals or to anybody else.

As things look now, he said, he doesn't see why the Giants should be anxious to give up Hubbell, who won 21 games for them last year.

Terry said there was nothing definite he could say about plans for next year.

"It is too early to figure on trades, and too early to announce any plans for possible trades," the Giant manager continued.

Officials of the Giant management in New York have laughed at rumors that they have offered Hubbell and cash to the Cardinals for one of the Dean brothers.

New York, Oct. 16 (AP).—"I don't know where the rumor started," one Giants' official said, "but I can tell you there is absolutely nothing to it. That story that Terry and Hubbell didn't get along is all hog wash."

Tech Captain Hurled Back by Eastern Line After Five-Yard Gain

"Blackie" Heatwole, back field ace of Tech, rips through the Eastern line for a 5-yard gain in the second quarter when Tech advanced to the 19-yard line before being repulsed. The teams battled to a scoreless tie in the game that marked the opening of the high school series yesterday afternoon at Central Stadium.

Whistle Ends Final Drive Near Goal

By John R. Vosburg.

EASTERN HIGH'S lightweight gridmen came through with their best performance yesterday afternoon to hold the powerful and favored football forces from McKinley Tech to a 0-0 tie in the first game of the 1934 inter-high series.

A crowd of approximately 5,000 gathered at Central Stadium to watch a ripping, slashing Eastern line, supported by an alert secondary defense, spring one of the biggest surprises in the 43-year history of the series.

Favored to win by high school football observers, Tech found its smooth attack, which had rolled over such strong teams as Baltimore Poly and Episcopal High, checked.

Threatens Twice.

Only twice was Tech able to threaten dangerously and on the second occasion the final whistle checked the offensive sally. The first one carried to the Eastern 3-yard line late in the first period when Pete Alley, Tech's high-powered full back, cut loose on a spinner play for 37 yards before being pulled down.

The Eastern line, outweighed 10 pounds per man, braced, flinging Blackie Heatwole, Tech's field general, on his neck for a gain. On the next play, a hard pass from Morris Schulman, Tech's center, hit the chest of Lee Nichols, one of the McKinley backs, and bounced crazily toward the side-line.

With the game virtually bouncing along with the ball, Frank Principe, Eastern's blocking half back, flung himself through the air and nestled the pigskin to the earth to change the entire complexion of the conflict and the inter-high series as well.

Safely Shackled.

Bob Hart, Eastern's left-foot kicker, punted out of danger and except for a last period passing attack, which ended with Alley being tackled on the Eastern 10-yard line as the whistle sounded, Tech was kept safely shackled.

Its vaunted back-field ace, Heatwole, was bottled up completely. The tackling of "Speed" Bullough, substitute Eastern end, Capt. Dick Absher and little Billy Cattell, Eastern's Filipino half back, practically buried the Tech ball carriers time after time.

Made Only 3 First Downs.

Eastern's offensive never threatened seriously and the Lincoln Parkers negotiated but three first downs. The most successful Eastern advance came in the second quarter when Shaw and Cattell clawed out two first downs from their own 19 only to be stopped at midfield when Shaw missed a first down on fourth down by little more than a foot.

Eastern elected to receive the opening kick-off. Cattell returned Alley's boot to the 28-yard line. A 5-yard penalty set Eastern back and Hart kicked to Heatwole, who was slammed to the turf on his own 42-yard line. Lynch got away on a reverse to Eastern's 47 for a first down. Hart intercepted Heatwole's pass and was downed on his own 38.

Pass Is Intercepted.

Cattell went through the middle of the line for 2 yards and Shaw tore off tackle for 7. Principe made it a first down on the 48 but the march was halted when Alley intercepted Cattell's pass at midfield. Alley slammed through for 8 yards and Lynch made a first down on

Albany Gets Harris In Deal for Sington

SWAGGERING DAVE HARRIS, whose bat was once the terror of all American League pitching, yesterday was dispatched by the Washington ball club to the Albany team of the International League—the first victim of the Nats' reconstruction policy.

Harris was transferred to Albany as part payment for the more youthful outfielder, Freddie Sington, in the deal which Owner Clark Griffith of the Nats declared also called for an outlay of "considerable cash."

Once the most-famed and most-feared pinch-hitter in the league, Harris in the past two seasons failed to lift his batting average to its customary .300 mark. The former Greensboro, N. C., sheriff also was slowing in the outfield and his departure had long been forecast. He is 31 years old, compared to Sington's 23 years.

Gets a Frigid Shoulder.

Big league baseball twice within the past six weeks has turned a frigid shoulder in Harris' direction. Last September 1 the Nats asked and received waivers on Harris from all clubs of both leagues, paving the way for his shipment to Albany in the Sington deal.

As a nominal member of the Albany club, Harris also was subject to draft at the major league draft meeting held during the world series, but again all big league clubs failed to claim him.

Never a flashy fielder, Harris' potent bat kept him in the big league for eight seasons. He came up from the Piedmont League to the Braves as a third baseman, abandoned the infield when he discovered that his hitting was far superior to his defensive play, and became an outfielder. Released by the Braves to the Pacific Coast League, he was recalled a year later by the White Sox.

Harris came to the Nats in an even swap five years ago for Outfielder Red Barnes, who failed to stick with the Red Sox. He was never able to break into the regular Washington outfield, but he rapidly earned recognition as a powerful pinch hitter and was the prime emergency-hitting choice of both Walter Johnson and Joe Cronin.

Long Matches Golf Tourney Features

Gabrel Wins on 20th Hole and Crabbe on 23d in Anacostia Play.

TWO torrid extra-hole matches in which Robert A. Gabrel and W. J. Crabbe, triumphed, featured yesterday's quarterfinals in the Anacostia amateur-open golf tournament.

Gabrel eliminated the cosharer of the medal, W. W. Seay, on the twentieth hole, and Crabbe, conqueror Monday of Ben Kong, put out Ray Fleming in a 23-hole battle.

The other two favorites, Harold Bowers, whose 71 tied for the medal with Seay, and Herman R. Allen, registered impressive victories. Bowers defeated Haynes Osborne, 4 and 2, while Allen conquered W. M. Smale, 2 and 1.

Gabrel Meets Allen.

Today's semifinals, starting at 11 a. m., will find Gabrel opposing Allen in the top bracket and Bowers and Crabbe clashing in the lower bracket.

Seay held a 2-up lead on Gabrel at the seventeenth, but lost the next two holes. On the twentieth, Gabrel reached the green in 2 and was down in 2 putts for his par 4, while Seay's best was a 5.

Crabbe and Fleming had a hole-for-hole battle throughout the match, being forced to play the last two holes in semidarkness. Crabbe won the fifth extra hole with a 3 to a 4 to settle the issue.

L. A. Sandford, Pat Axtell, T. V. Wilder and N. L. King were the second flight winners.

Father 'Hands Off' To Perry's Pro Offer

LONDON, Oct. 16 (AP).—F. S. Perry, father of the world's leading tennis player, Frederick John Perry, believes his son is old enough to decide his own personal affairs and he has no intention of advising him whether he should turn professional.

"Fred has reached the age," said Perry, senior, "when he is able to make his own decisions on these matters. To have these offers flying around is a big responsibility for him but he must decide for himself. I've done all I could to help him and put British tennis back on the map. I've never thought much about the problems of professionals. I leave the decision to him with complete confidence he will make the right one."

Perry now is in the United States preparatory to a tour of Australia, and has been beseiged with offers to turn professional. Among them are contracts both for playing tennis and for work in the movies.

He holds the National titles of Australia, the United States and England and is the No. 1 player of the British team which holds the Davis Cup.

Los Angeles, Oct. 16 (AP).—Fred Perry, the world's tennis champion, likes Hollywood so well he will return to the cinema city in February after his exhibition tour of Australia instead of continuing on to England with the other British net stars. Perry leaves here with the British team tomorrow night for Australia.

Frederick Soccer Loop Opens Season Sunday

Frederick, Md., Oct. 16 (Spl.).—The Frederick County Soccer League will open the season with Middletown defending the championship it won last year.

Two Soccer Elevens Organized at Bowie

Organization of two soccer elevens at Bowie High School has been completed. The first team includes Frank Brown, captain; Martin Fladung, Elbert Hardy, Elder Bell, Frank Seitz, Otto Merkel, Billy Davidson, Roy Fisher, Albert Clark, Bobby Nalley and Earl Lloyd.

Buddy McCauley is captain of the second eleven which also comprises Melvin Sweeney, Jack Larsen, Billy Wildman, Harry Spradlin, James Berbig, Casper Thompson, James Brown, James Clark, Burton Kelbaugh and James Shegogue.

Widmyer, Star in '33, Loses Role to Soph

By Lewis F. Atchison.

It is not a sappy detective yarn, with the butler, old John Asterbucks, the handsome young suitor and the charming fiancee suspected of doing away with one Earl Widmyer, a wealthy sportsman, who, for the sake of the plot, must live in a spook-infested castle. It's a story of Widmyer's strange, almost uncanny disappearance from the Maryland backfield.

To give you a synopsis of the plot: Earl Widmyer is, or was, the Terrapins' star half back—touted for All-American honors—called the fastest half back in college football, and rightly so—a good kicker, passer and punter. He had everything.

All-Southern in '33.

Last season it was impossible to read about a Maryland game without getting an eyeful of superlatives describing Widmyer's play. He starred in virtually every game and was given a berth on the third All-America roll of honor. He was named on the first All-Southern combination. The year 1934 promised to see him flare even more brilliantly in the gridiron firmament.

But here it is getting on toward midseason and the Earl's name has hardly been mentioned. He has, in fact, disappeared from the first eleven, relegated to the third string, just a step above the scrubs. What has happened to this budding National star? 'Tis a deep, dark mystery.

Lurking ominously in the background is a squad of husky sophomore backs, hard-boiled, rough gents in a football sense, and the finger of suspicion points firmly at them. They are the responsible parties, one of them in particular.

Widmyer's absence was first noted in the opening game with St. John's, but any significance was discounted, because he was known to be favoring a game leg. Then against Washington and Lee he played only part of the time, substituting for one of these sophomore backs. It might have been because the injury still bothered him.

Stonebraker in Stead.

Then Navy entertained the Old Liners last Saturday at Annapolis and among those who did not play for Maryland was Earl Midmyer, star half back, prospective all-America. In his stead played Jack Stonebraker, 5-foot 11-inch, 150-pound sophomore, of Hagerstown. Stonebraker, incidentally, played a whale of a game, giving rise to the probability that Widmyer will not play often this season. At least not for Maryland.

Of course Coach Jack Faber said earlier in the season that Widmyer was to be saved for "crucial" moments when his speed could be utilized to the best extent, and it may be that such a moment has not been spotted.

Lack of Practice.

Maryland officials said he was kept out the Navy game because of lack of practice and did not appear to have the proper game temperament. The old zipper was missing.

The fact remains, however, that the Earl has disappeared in a most mysterious fashion—hidden, it seems, under a blanket of sophomore ability, Stonebraker's.

King Bill V, a Dingy Goat, Now Sits on Navy's Throne

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Oct. 16 (AP).—A new goat dynasty has been founded at the Naval Academy.

King Bill IV, Navy's hardy mascot for years, has passed on to the animal kingdom's happy hunting grounds, and his two heirs, softened by a life of ease, are not robust enough to carry their father's mantle.

So a tough youngster from the Western plains has been summoned to become King Bill V. His dingy white coat, covered by a gold robe trimmed in blue and with a large gold "N," King Bill roams to sidelines near the Navy bench at football games.

In past years the United States Naval Academy's long line of "Bills" have been born and reared at the Academy dairy. There, amid a princely atmosphere, they have received a regal education to fit them for their reign over the athletic fortunes of the Midshipmen.

But there is no blue blood in that hardy commoner, Bill the Fifth. His registration papers show he came from the Baltimore stockyards. Sandwiched among cattle, he rattled East in a freight car.

The trouble with young Bill is that he hasn't any of the social graces. He's tough and just as rowdy with his Navy associates as with their opponents.

His joy is the practice field. There he inflicts terrific punishment on the tackling dummies and blocking bags. He's young but he's cocky.

"Bring on that Army mule," says King Bill V.

DRYNESS RUINS CIGARS

Now DOUBLE-SEALED to make you DOUBLE-SURE it's FRESH

FROM the minute a cigar is made, drying action seriously affects its freshness. And, in chilly weather, however modern the dealer's protection, artificial heat adds an extra-drying influence that ruins cigars.

So we now DOUBLE-SEAL La Palina — to make you DOUBLE-SURE it's FRESH. Double-sealing protects freshness immeasurably longer than ordinary wrapping; guards La Palina's famous blend—the richest Havana from Pinar del Rio with other choice tropical island-grown leaves.

Carbina, $2.80 Favorite, Has Easy Time Winning Laurel Feature From Ashen

Audley Miss Wins Second Straight

Result Never in Doubt; Action Is Victorious in Steeplechase.

By Walter Haight.

CARBINA, an Audley Farm miss, which spent the summer in the Middle West chasing a variety of horses to the finish lines, is enjoying her stay in nearby Maryland. She was sent to the post for the second time yesterday at Laurel and for the second time she came flying home with the major end of a purse. The race was The Sinapuxent, a six-furlong effort for three-year olds and six others accepted the issue.

With Jockey Kacala throwing his arms, Carbina coasted to the wire two and a half lengths in front of Ashen and four length ahead of Dusky Princess. The other three just wasted jockey fees.

Pays $2.80 Mutuel.

For the majority of those who make the show possible, the betters, the race was over before it started. They literally flooded the mutuel machines with good American dollars and with few exceptions they went away with pasteboards on Carbina. A few minutes later they were collecting at the rate of $2.80 for each $2 invested.

Carbina did not even give them a chance to worry. She popped out of the starting stalls along with Ashen and gradually drew away throughout the running. Meade, on Ashen, gave his mount a shellacking all the way but Carbina was too much horse. Dusky Princess stayed third. In fact, there was no change in the position of any of the six horses after the first few yards.

A fair-sized early week crowd was on hand to see racing under perfect weather conditions.

Our David Scores.

Some Good, the first race favorite, proved a bad one for the chalk players. They supplied enough money to make him 85 cents on the dollar before the race and enough boos to make his face red after the race. However, poor racing luck caused him to be fourth in the field. He was bumped and blocked during the early running and was lucky to be close. The winner turned up in Our David at $24.20 mutuel. He had a head margin on Jack Low, the early pacesetter, which in turn completed the 6 furlongs a length and a half in advance of Gallic, a field horse.

E. R. Bradley's Bloodroot, a first time starter, lived up to her fast trials in the second. Under a masterful ride by Don Meade, she cut through on the rail at the head of the stretch when Belle of Dixie went slightly wide and came on to beat that filly by a half length. Saint Cleo was third. The winner paid $9.60.

Action Easy Victor.

The Middleburg (Va.) Chamber of Commerce has a just complaint. Of all the races run at Laurel the steeplechase was named for that town. It drew one fair jumper and eight hobby horses. The fair race horse, Action, was the winner by a city block. Lei was second by another city block and The Chisler was third by a country mile.

As expected, there were tumbles. Big Tip fell at the second fence. Armageddon crashed at the fifth fence and later was hauled away to the glue factory. Rozell lost her rider at the eleventh fence. Just to prove it was a dizzy affair, the man in charge of the timeboard put the numbers in upside down and Action, which closed at even money, paid a $5 mutuel.

Gophers to Play Colgate in 1935

Iowa Plays Kerr's Squad From East on Oct. 12.

Iowa City, Ia., Oct. 16 (AP).—The University of Iowa foot ball team will meet Colgate University October 12, 1935, Coach Ossie Solem announced today.

The appearance of Andy Kerr's team here will be the first by an Eastern eleven since 1931 when Pittsburgh played the Hawkeyes.

Two more games for October 5 and 19 are yet to be arranged.

15-Rounders Ordered in New York

10-Stanzas Not Sufficient for Title Contenders, Commission Rules.

NEW YORK, Oct. 16 (AP).—New York State's Athletic Commission today decided heavyweight challengers must fight 15 rounds in elimination contests, not 10, nor 12, in order for the winner to prove his fitness over the title distance. This also applies to candidates for championship matches in smaller divisions at the commission's discretion.

Smoldering under it all was the controversy fired by the recent ten-round decision Steve Hamas scored over Art Lasky in the first of the winner's heavyweight eliminations, designed to produce a challenger for Max Baer next spring.

Although Hamas just lasted under Lasky's battering, he received the decision on the basis of his work in the early rounds, with vital help from a single back-hand slap that cost Lasky one round under the commission no-foul rule.

Must Show More.

"We are telling Hamas now, and all the rest of the challengers," said Brig. Gen. John J. Phelan, chairman of the commission, "that ten rounds is not enough to prove the right to a title match. We are also warning Hamas that he can't rest on this kind of a laurel and expect us to approve of a match with Baer in the spring if he does nothing more satisfactory in the meantime."

Primo Carnera pleaded that a place be held open for him in the eliminations until he could get back from a South American tour. He reminded the commission he once licked Lasky.

The commission wrote the British Board of Boxing Control that it wouldn't recognize Freddie Miller, of Cincinnati, as featherweight champion here until and if he defeated one logical contender such as Baby Arizmendi in New York.

Brewers' Rally Fails to Win From NRA

Eagles Forced to Call on Lanahan to Win by Score, 7-6.

HEURICH BREWERS' belated ninth-inning rally fell short two runs of victory, and the NRA Blue Eagles won their second straight yesterday at West Ellipse, 7 to 6.

Dick Lanahan, the Eagles' "Dizzy Dean," who hurled a no-hit no-run game Monday, was pressed into service in the eighth inning to quell the Brewers' uprising, and saved the day by fanning the first man to face him with the tying run on third base.

Before Lanahan was called to the rescue, the Brewers had bounced Stevens for two doubles and a triple to produce four runs in the eighth inning. Although permitting Heurich to count twice in the final inning, Lanahan managed to pitch himself out of trouble.

NRA scored its winning run in the ninth, and in the same inning the Brewers were stopped after a two-run rally.

Zahn, Barry, Hilleary and Long, with three hits each, featured in hitting for the NRA Eagles. Ralph Bennie accounted for two of the Brewers' five hits.

Southeastern Has Edge in Victories

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 16 (AP).—Southern Conference football teams are asking no quarter and apparently needing none this season in their rivalry with their erstwhile brethren in the Southeastern circuit.

Although the Southeastern teams have won four of their seven contests with Southern members, the senior circuit has outscored its opponents, 68 to 58, in interleague warfare.

All of the Southern victories have been shutouts: Duke, 20; Georgia Tech, 0; North Carolina, 14; Georgia, 0; Washington and Lee, 7; Kentucky, 0.

Close Triumphs.

With the exception of Tennessee's 19-to-7 victory over North Carolina, Southeastern members have won by margins of a single touchdown, in every case after hard-fought battles, with the issue in doubt all the way. Florida needed a last-minute touchdown to whip V. P. I., 20 to 13, after the Techmen had tied the score in the final period, Georgia Tech nosed out Clemson, 12 to 7, and Kentucky, held scoreless for three periods, finally pushed across the touchdown that whipped Clemson, 7 to 0.

The Southeastern members are conceded little chance to add to their margin in the week-end battling, while the older circuit's representatives, competing in two interleague games, probably will enter both in favorite roles. North Carolina, entertaining Kentucky at Chapel Hill, will be favored, while North Carolina State may gather enough momentum to roll over Florida's 'Gators.

Wrestling Is Taken Seriously By Those Who Pay the Bills

By Jimmy Powers
(Pinch-Hitting for Gallico).

NEW YORK, Oct. 16.—So now New York's winter wrestling season has opened and with a sell-out crowd, too, filling a barn-like armory with lilac smoke and setting the old girders vibrating with the surf of cheers. All our old grappling friends are back—the bald, butter-yellow Buddhas, the scowling glory that is Greece, the growling grandeur that is Rome.

All are the same—faking rascals, every one of them. They tumble amiably and paw clumsily like a loosed kennel of muzzling, wheezing Great Danes. I am aware that the squirming troupers are fair game, but it is also customary to poke fun at the polyglot people who support the shows. I am sorry if you are expecting such a piece. I can't do it. You see, the press row last night was full and so the usher took me back and wedged me down in the crowd. I sat there, mildly resenting the location, but soon, through sundry bumps and thumps, I discovered I had been accepted into the free masonry of the cult.

All about me were peering men and women, all so earnest, all so obviously having a good time. My neighbor was a man with the raw, red hands of dishwasher. In a tense moment a photographer leaped up at the ringside, his electric bulb stuffed with crinkled silver paper, poised for the explosion. My friend bellowed through cupped palms: "Heyl Peectur taker! Seet down weet you' komera, you!" The photographer deposited himself in his chair. My flushed friend thrust out a pearl-diver's hand and grinned: "Haw, I mek him seet down, beeg steef!" I felt like a Judas, but I shook his red fingers.

The orchidaceous, mink-wrapped ladies at the Madison Square Garden shows are amused queens on a lark. The ladies at the armory, mostly buxom domestics, are frankly there to cheer their Johannes, their Gustaves and their Vladimirs. Their escorts clench black cigars in bared teeth and when the tension increases and it seems as if a tortured principal's leg will burst from its socket, the men gnaw their cigars and the women as furiously punish their chiclets and all fix the ring with glaring eyes.

In the rear float dim rows of ghost faces lost in the fog. You catch the rich gleam of the exit lights shining like cut rubies. From out of these seats roll guttural pleas and commands. "Hees ponchink heem in de fezz! Hees ponchink de fezz, rafaree!" When a wrestler mounts his prone rival and pumps both legs the happy chorus chants: "Row! row! row!" There are rapt faces from the Russian steppes, faces from the Levant, drinking in every groan. Beneath us a blonde sits entranced. She ignites a cigarette. The smoke drifts into her nostrils and all unknowing she purses up her scarlet lips as if for a kiss, holding the cigarette out farther, squinting through heavy, mascaraed eyes. Suddenly she screams: "Get his foot! get his foot!" "A-a-ah! That's it, that's it!" and then as a cruel twist sends the victim flopping like a beheaded rooster, she cries: "Whooo! My goodness!" and she swallows hard.

Wispy-haired, toothless Joe Humphries makes the announcements. He will be 62 this coming Friday and his faded eyes have looked on these sights for 44 years. His voice is cracked and sputtery, but he carries on cheerfully from bout to bout. Sometimes he will screw his face up like a man who has eaten a green persimmon. He imitates the wrestlers with an "Agh! agh! umpff! awfuff! in the pauses of his rhetorical, long-vertebraed sentences. When he makes his final announcement three middle-aged ladies in front of us continue to gape long after he has quit the ring. One of them is a wide blonde with a gold tooth. She frowns and seems near-sighted and a little bit drunk.

Everyone in the show is abused. That's to be expected. There will be many a boo echoing through the flying shows to come. I thought of Beans Reardon, the umpire, and how he had been fearfully lashed one summer day at a local ball park. He stepped back in the midst of a vicious verbal torrent the better to identify his attacker. That night in an arm-chair restaurant his afternoon's assailant came shuffling up to take his order. The trapped fellow stood, ox-like, docilely waiting until Beans had spent his breath. Then he whispered a meek "Yes-sir." It was so pathetic Beans relented.

He asked why he, a stranger, had been called such terrible names. "Well," muttered the menial, "I am an old man and I have slaved all my life. My bunions burn my feet. I am browbeat 12 hours a day. The chef curses me at one end; the customers throw his scorched eggs in my face at the other. I go crazy. My only relief is to go to the park and holler at you."

Fordham Fears St. Mary's Fumbles

Gaels Aided by 'Miscues'; Defeated Rams That Way Last Year.

NEW YORK, Oct. 16 (AP).—Caesar feared the Gauls, Stagg feared Purdue and now Fordham fears the fumble. Only it's St. Mary's fumbles that Fordham is afraid of.

Head man Jim Crowley, of the Fordham footballers, while glancing over the records of the Californians who play the Maroon at the Polo Grounds Saturday, discovered that the galloping Gaels, mad marauders of Moaraga, or whatever they call themselves this year, are afflicted with an odd malady.

Profit Handsomely.

They fumble frequently near their opponents' goal line. But unlike most fumbles, the St. Mary's athletes profit handsomely by their mistakes. Quite frequently they turn them into touchdowns. Mr. Crowley found that quite a few of the West Coasters' games have been won by an adroit fumble, when their attack was stopped near the goal line.

St. Mary's beat Fordham that way last year, and Crowley's West Coast spies report that the Gaels beat California the same way this year. So Mr. Crowley and his Ram footballers are planning to defend themselves against any similar occurrence next Saturday.

Offensive Weapon.

There is no law against a fumble. Usually it is marked up as a big help for the other fellow. But Slip Madigan, the magician of the Moragas, has turned the bobble into an offensive weapon. It is done this way:

A galloping Gael gallops up to the goal line. He finds himself intercepted by a couple of rough fellows from the opposition. So he fumbles.

Sound Advice Wins 'Gansett Feature

Isaiah, in Lead Until Near Finish, Is Second.

Narragansett Park, Pawtucket, R. I., Oct. 16 (AP).—Carrying only 100 pounds and benefiting by the 8-minute delay at the post, Catawba Stable's Sound Advice, the 2-year-old son of Wise Counsellor and the second choice at 7-to-2 odds, won the Boston, a 5½-furlong all-age sprint before 8,000 spectators this afternoon.

Joseph Klain's Isaiah, the favorite in the seven-horse field, was assigned 119 pounds. That delay at the gate, with J. E. Smallman's Quickly causing all the trouble, made the difference, for Isaiah led almost until the finish, running a front race, with Sound Advice close all the way. Turning for home, Glen Haines let out Sound Advice and went out front, but Isaiah came back until about 100 yards from home, when the weight told and the Catawba colt won by a neck.

Scientist Throws Fast One Past Dizzy Dean

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 16 (AP). The Dazzling Deans, fresh from a breakfast of ham and eggs and decked out in baseball toggery, invaded the sanctums of science today, breezed through its wonders in typical Dean fashion, and left just as the batter for the science side threatened to get them in a hole.

Take it from the elder member of the pitching clan—Jerome Herman "Dizzy" Dean—the visit of himself and brother, Paul "Daffy," to historic Franklin Institute contained nothing difficult for a Dean—nothing at all, until Dr. James Barnes, the associate director of the institute's museum, went technical on the boys. Then Dizzy remembered a "date."

"It is very interesting that in a baseball bat there is a center of oscillation," was Dr. Barnes' observation.

He Doesn't Know.

"Hey, Paul, I think we gotta go," he hastened to add. "I think we're going to be late for the ball game."

"You don't get much sleep doing this jumping around the country," he said. "I tried to sleep on the plane last night coming here, but my ears got all stopped up, and I didn't get any rest.

While the Sun Shines.

"But this is one time in our lives to get the dough," and we're getting it while we can.

"Anyway, I'm going to try to duck that vaudeville tour. That would run me nuts. I'll stick to baseball, it's my game. Leave the stage to the actors—that's their game."

The Dean boys returned to their diamond realm in a double-header between two local semipro clubs, for which 8,000 fans turned out at Shibe Park. The Philadelphia Stars, for which the Deans performed, dropped both games to the Bolden Stars, 8 to 0 and 4 to 3. The Deans played the outfield in the first setto, and Dizzy pitched for two innings of the second contest, called in the seventh frame because of darkness.

Stocks Turn Again to Take Higher Ground

Market Seizes New Grip on Recovery; Trading, 677,530 Shares.

New York, Oct. 16 (AP).—Financial markets took a new grip on recovery today and sentiment, which was rather cloudy yesterday, improved noticeably under the stimulus of advancing prices.

Without any especial news influences to account for the change of front, stocks, staples and bonds stepped along side by side in the steady forward movement.

The turnover in stocks amounted to 677,530 shares, against 508,176 on Monday, and the Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 issues registered a net advance of eight-tenths of a point, at 72.2. This average was off a similar amount yesterday.

Better Market Seen.

With inflation talk dying down to a murmur, proponents of currency stabilization were disposed to see hopes for a better stock market on a more firmly grounded dollar.

With President Roosevelt continuing his conferences with leading bankers and prominent industrialists, the anti-inflationists were optimistic in regard to possible Washington developments which would tend to promote a further broadening of the credit field and open up the capital market for promotion needs.

The metal shares led the upturn in stocks coincident with another advance here of ⅜ of a cent an ounce, to 55⅝ cents, in the price of bar silver imported for commercial use. U. S. Smelting got up around 5 points, while issues of Cerro de Pasco, Howe Sound and American Smelting showed gains of 1 to around 2.

Amusement Stocks Up.

In addition to the mining group, which hopes to profit by higher silver levels, amusement company stocks were unusually lively in response to reports of growing admissions.

Paramount certificates, representing a concern in receivership, was the most active issue of the session. This stock closed at 4⅝, up ¾ of a point. Columbia Pictures also made a new high for the year with a gain of a point. Loew's was up more than a point.

The merchandising division was in demand as retail sales continued to brighten the business picture in contrast to the slowness of heavy industry. Montgomery Ward, Macy, Sears Roebuck, Spiegel-May-Stern and Marshall Field were fractionally to a point higher.

On Gaining List.

Although U. S. Steel and American Telephone eased, and various standard utilities did little or nothing, gainers of 1 to 2 or more points included Union Pacific, Santa Fe, Delaware & Hudson, Johns-Manville, Case, American Can, International Harvester, Columbian Carbon, Chrysler, American Commercial Alcohol, American Tobacco B and Celanese. Liggett & Myers B and Coca Cola advanced around a point each to new 1934 peaks.

Notwithstanding the subsidence of inflationary psychology, leading foreign exchanges registered a substantial advance against the dollar. Sterling came back more than 2 cents, to $4.93⅞, and the French franc was up .01¼ of a cent, at 6.66 cents. Shanghai dollars, on the other hand, reflected the 10 per cent silver export tax imposed by the Chinese government with a decline of 2 1-5 cents, to 35.05 cents.

Some cheer was promoted by the third quarter preliminary report of the Du Pont company, which disclosed net profits of $1.24 a common share, compared with 96 cents in the preceding quarter and 95 cents in the corresponding period last year.

Financial District Is Impressed By U.S. Bond Rise, Report Says

For First Time in Several Weeks 3 Per Cent Long-Term Issues of Treasury Are Quoted Above Parity; Government Support Found Evident.

Special Correspondent of The Post.

New York, Oct. 16.—For the first time in several weeks, both 3 per cent long-term issues of the Treasury were quoted well above parity today. The financial district, and especially that large part of it now directly concerned with the market for Federal Government securities, has been deeply impressed by the sharp rise in quotations of Treasury obligations since President Roosevelt delivered his fireside radio address more than two weeks ago.

Unquestionably, support buying of its own bonds by the Treasury for its own agencies, and possibly for the stabilization fund as well, has been a factor. As is well known, Government bonds are specifically exempt from the application of section 9 of the securities exchange act of 1934, designed to bar "rigging" and "jiggling" of markets for particular securities. The fact that weekly announcements of purchases of its own securities were recently stopped by Secretary Morgenthau has served to strengthen suspicion that support operations may be more active.

However, the many dealers and banks now actively trading in Government bonds, while they can not trace Government buying with any degree of accuracy because of the way it is spread about, doubt very much that it has been the major factor in the current advance. Last month the long-term credit of the Federal Government was appraised by the market at about a 3⅝ per cent basis. Now, it is appraised once again at 3 per cent.

Prospects of More Offerings Of Long-Term Governments.

Why this better feeling, since the budget remains badly unbalanced, the indicated deficit for the current month of some $275,000,000 being much the largest of any to date for the current fiscal year?

The answer to this question is to be found primarily in the changed prospects for additional offerings of long-term Governments. Earlier this year, the Treasury indicated a desire to transform a larger proportion of the National debt into long-term obligations. A large floating debt has been recognized as undesirable and likely to prove embarrassing on occasion. It is stated by bankers that, at an informal conference here last summer, T. Jefferson Coolidge, Undersecretary of the Treasury, suggested the flotation of a $5,000,000,000 long-term refunding issue, to convert a large portion of the floating debt into long-term bonds with a coupon of 3 per cent or less. It was indicated to him at the time that the Federal credit did not warrant such an operation, since the budget was largely unbalanced.

The contention of the New York banks is that commercial institutions should not be asked to purchase obligations with a maturity beyond five years. They now believe, after a recent series of conferences with Treasury and other Administration leaders, that their attitude will be respected. Accordingly, the financial district expects the Treasury to sell note issues of less than five-year maturity chiefly to convert certificates of indebtedness and called Fourth Liberties, and to raise any new money found requisite.

Supply of Long-Term Issues May Fall Below Demand.

Of the total Treasury interest-bearing debt of some $26,500,000,000, only $12,500,000,000 falls due after 1940. If the supply of such long-term issues is not materially increased, an anomolous situation will result in the Government bond market. The supply of long-term issues may fall below the demand, making for advancing prices, despite the fact that the total debt is expanded steadily as a result of the heavy relief and public works outlays. Many insurance companies and mutual savings banks feel that they should build up a large portfolio of Government bonds in order to improve both the average quality and the liquidity of their portfolios. Their buying has been the backbone laterly of the Government bond market.

As long as commercial banks will provide the bulk of the new money needed by the Treasury through buying short-dated Treasury paper, the market for long-term Government bonds will be artificially kept strong through such institutional buying.

Eventually, however, the piper must be paid. Eventually this Government, like that of many European countries after the World War, will have to face the music, and tackle the difficult problem of converting many billions of short-dated Governments into long-term bonds, to be distributed more largely among investors.

In the meanwhile, many bankers doubt seriously the wisdom of loading themselves further with unprecedented amounts of Government paper. They doubt, however, whether they have much choice in the matter, since the Treasury can hold over them the unpleasant alternative of a Government-owned central bank.

Bonds Climb Three-tenths; Volume Rises

New York, Oct. 16 (AP).—Encouraged by a strong government list, domestic corporate loans advanced over a broad front today. The foreign section was steady.

Transfers aggregated $16,634,000 par value, the largest in more than a month, and compared with $10,571,000 on Monday. The turnover in governments totaled $7,170,000, against $3,360,000 the day before.

Indirect obligations of the United States Government, long a disturbing element for the market as a whole, led the first-string issues with gains of nearly three-quarters of a point.

There was a huge turnover in Home Owners Loan 3s, which closed twenty-two-thirty-seconds higher, at 98.2, and Federal Farm Mortgage 3s, which ended twenty-one-thirty-seconds better, at 98.2. Most all of the Treasury and Liberty issues were from three-thirty-seconds to twenty-thirty-seconds higher.

Lower-priced bonds were in good demand and responded with gains of 1 to 2 or more points, including Bush Terminal 4s, up 5 points at 60, Chicago & North Western 6½s, up 2½ at 77, and St. Louis Southwestern 4s, up 4½ at 70. Four issues of Paramount Publix bonds were heavily traded in and finished 2 to 3 points higher coincident with extreme activity of that company's stock.

Other issues selling higher included obligations of Northern Pacific, Rio Grande Western, Studebaker, Warner Bros., Western Maryland and Wheeling & Lake Erie.

Improvement in high-grade issues was less pronounced. Bell Telephone of Pennsylvania 5s were ½ higher at 116¼, Detroit Edison 5s gained ½ at 108½ and Norfolk & Western 4s were ¼ higher at 106¼.

Others improving included obligations of Chesapeake & Ohio, Cincinnati Union Terminal, B. F. Goodrich and National Steel.

Curb's Prices Close Higher; Volume Gains

New York, Oct. 16 (AP).—Modest advances predominated at the close of trading on the Curb Exchange today. A few inactive specialties staged sharp gains. Several scattered soft spots were in evidence too. Volume was slightly ahead of the previous day.

Singer Manufacturing continued its spectacular uptrend, advancing 4½ points at 239½ and establishing another new high for the year. Parker Rust Proof recorded a similar rise in fairly active trading. Newmont, Gulf Oil, Scovill Manufacturing and Sherwin Williams finished about a point each.

Fajardo Sugar, Todd Shipbuilding and Commonwealth Edison dipped 1 to 2. American Gas & Electric slipped a fraction, but Electric Bond & Share finished a trifle higher. Fractional Improvement was shown by American Cyanamid "B," Creole Petroleum, Swift & Co., Wright Hargreaves and Hiram Walker.

Wheat Renews Climb Under Lead of Corn

Major Grains Follow in Drive to Higher Levels on Buying.

Chicago, Oct. 16 (AP).—Under the leadership of corn, prices of the major grains scored material gains in a late market rally today, an advance of 2 cents in corn stimulating smypathetic buying especially in wheat and oats.

Independent strength in the corn pit, a feature throughout the session, became the dominating bullish factor in the general market upturn during the last hour of trading.

Purchase of corn, according to some observers, reflected improved sentiment accompanying belated recognition of the acute feed situation and disappointing husking returns. With leading professional traders persistent buyers, corn prices moved above the 80 cents level to the highest point in more than a fortnight despite pressure of profit taking.

Advances in Wheat.

At the close corn was 1⅝ to 2 cents higher than Monday's finish, May selling at 80⅝ @ 80½. Gains in wheat ranged from 1¼ to 1¾ cents, May closing at $1.01⅜ @ $1.01½. Oats were ⅝ to ⅞ higher, rye was unchanged to ¾ cent up and barley was ¾ cent off to ½ cent higher.

The market showed a firm undertone during most of the session largely because of the absence of selling pressure, traders virtually ignoring extreme weakness abroad.

Stop-Loss Selling.

Scattered liquidation and some stop-loss selling held wheat prices to a narrow range early, but reports of dust storms in parts of Kansas and Nebraska and further evidence of the need of moisture in the winter wheat belt Southwest were welcomed by bullish interests. Continued reduction in primary receipts was the basis for some purchasing.

Wheat traders took notice of a Government report pointing to two possibilities for a marked advance in world wheat prices, namely, the critical growing period in Argentina and an indication that heavy feeding of wheat in the United States and Europe might occur.

The corn trade gave a bullish interpretation to a statement of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics that because of the acute live stock feed situation corn prices may be expected to remain at a relatively high level throughout the coming year. Reports of husking returns were said to show the corn harvest in some sections had revealed much light weight and chaff grain as well as ear-worm damage.

Heavier Yield Indicated by Virginia Crops

Corn Production Estimated at 35,402,000 Bushels, Report States.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 16 (AP).—Virginia crop yields above the average this year are indicated by early harvests, the October crop report of the Federal-State Crop Reporting Service compiled by Henry M. Taylor, agricultural statistician, states.

The report said most of the corn crop had been cut by October 1 and husking had commenced. Total production was estimated the same as last month, 35,402,000 buhels, compared with 36,918,000 last year and 33,611,000 for the five-year average.

The tobacco crop, maturing earlier than usual this year, had been harvested by October 1 and growers reported weight and quality good. The new estimate for flue cured, slightly larger than last month, is 52,418,000 pounds, compared with 56,712,000 last year and a five-year average of 78,594,000.

The fire cured crop was described as one of the finest ever produced and is now estimated at 21,505,000 pounds, compared to 24,928,000 last year and 24,587,000 for the five-year period.

The burley yield is about average, reported at 8,925,000 pounds, as compared with 13,390,000 and a 6,692,000 five-year average. Bad weather caused some loss of sun-cured while curing, but the yield remained unusually heavy, estimated at 3,465,000 pounds, compared to 2,016,000 last year and a five-year average of 4,249,000.

Danville to Ask State For Power Bond Writ

Danville, Va., Oct. 16 (AP).—A writ of mandamus from the State Supreme Court when it meets next month in Richmond, is the next move planned by Danville citizens seeking a new referendum on the question of whether the city shall issue $2,225,000 in bonds for the erection of an electric power plant.

After hearing arguments on the proposed referendum Saturday, Judge Henry C. Leigh ruled in corporation court today he could not sign the writ of election petitioned for because the people voted on this same issue less than a year ago.

Story Tellers.

"It was a dark and stormy night," the old-time authors used to write when they began some dreadful tale in which grim horror would prevail. "The lightning flashed, the thunder roared," and not a reader then was bored; they liked surroundings grim and wild, when terror was was on terror piled. A lonely house among the woods, the authors thought the proper goods; a lonely house with sagging walls, and phantoms stalking through the halls—the proper setting for a crime, in that forgotten, bygone time. And now some night club is the scene of crimes that turn our life-blood green. A damsel's seated in her chair, conspicuous in all the glare; she's smiling as she sips her gin, and fiddles with a diamond pin; she full of happiness and pep, and cares no hoot about her rep; the lights go out, and in the dark death's aiming at a shining mark; the lights go on, and there's the maid, slain by some punk assassin's blade. This is the latest style in crime, and it's been worked time after time. But I, a relic of old days, prefer the good time-honored ways. The lonely house among the trees, where ghosts are holding jamborees; the wailing wind among the hills suggests all kinds of pleasant thrills; the pouring rain, the thunder clap, the lost and weather-beaten chap, the grim avenger on the path, the meeting and the deed of wrath, this is the setting I admire, these the surroundings I desire. But I must take what I receive, and o'er forgotten methods grieve.

Radio Waves and Ripples

By George M. Adams, Jr.

WJSV's birthday broadcast, marking its second anniversary as a Columbia Broadcasting Co. station, Saturday from 10:30 to 11:30 p. m., will be in the nature of a banquet with the announcers as waiters and Jess Willard, oldest announcer in point of service, as head waiter.

After numerous excursions and unproductive executive meetings, details are finally being shaped up. While the entire tone of the broadcast will be informal, an attribute that characterizes the station, numerous features have been planned with a generous supply of speeches of congratulation by local civic officials.

Everyone who has contributed to the making of the station, artists, announcers, engineers and special drawing cards like Arthur Gorfrey, will take part in dramatic flashbacks showing bits of WJSV's most popular programs.

WASHINGTON'S first locally produced serial, "Little Women," in its first episode Monday night, proved itself to be a beautiful, sympathetic version. The voices are well chosen and the whole performance was of network caliber.

Tears were in order. Real, big ones rolled down the cheek of Ann Ives, who played a fine Marmee, when she told her daughters they must give their breakfast to a poor family. Episode two, on WRC tomorrow at 6:30 p. m., will show Jo meeting Laurie, the next-door laddie, whom she later surrenders to Amy.

Jack Smith (he whispers)—"There was an intimate and informal air about the business of broadcasting when I started."

Richard Himber (leads the Champions)—"I've been working on theme songs: 'The Waring of the Green,' 'Lyman in the Hay.'"

FOR the first time since last March the voice of Admiral Byrd will be heard over C. B. S. tonight at 10 o'clock, when the lately sequestered explorer exchanges greetings with his mother, Mrs. Eleanor Bolling Byrd, who will speak from her home at Winchester, Va.

She has held herself in readiness for two months awaiting his return to the expedition base. Radio equipment was set up in her home during that time and a C. B. S. announcer stood by on successive Wednesday nights. Tonight when the admiral hears his mother's voice, two WJSV engineers, Clyde Hunt and Les Bowman, will be with her, aiding at the broadcast.

Ripples.

H. V. Kaltenborn, C. B. S. news analyst, was in town yesterday interviewing members of the Cabinet . . . and William S. Paley, president of C. B. S., arrives here today to attend the Federal Communications Commission hearing. Paley has never seen the present studios of WJSV, local outlet of C. B. S. . . . Fred Shawn, N. B. C. program director, and John Mayo, WRC announcer, stood at attention on a platform with the ladies of the local Hadassah organization while members sang "America" at the Wardman Park yesterday . . . Robert Trout, WJSV announcer, has just passed his twenty-sixth birthday . . . Joe Brown, WOL's maestro of kiddie broadcasts, is plenty burned up because local rulings forbid commercial appearance of juvenile talent on the air . . . Bojidar P. Sloianovitch, Charge d'Affaires at the Yugoslavian Legation, will eulogize the late King Alexander of Yugoslavia tomorrow on WJSV at 4 p. m. . . . A message from Pope Pius XI to all Catholic missions will be broadcast by N. B. C. networks today at 1:45 p. m. . . . "What I Know About Gandhi" will be told by Miss Madeline Slade, former secretary to the Indian leader, today on WJSV at 1:30 p. m.
